Commission Form Of D. C. Government Attacked; Suffrage Demand Presented

(Pictures on Page 12)

By Charles Stofberg,
Post Staff Writer

Demands for a city manager-council form of municipal government and ardent pleas for local suffrage were made yesterday by civic spokesmen as hearings opened at the District Building on the Seal plan for reorganization.

While little opposition was voiced to the departmental set-up proposed by the Commissioners' "kitchen cabinet," many objections were raised to a continuation of the present form of commission government.

Sefton Darr, speaking for the District Suffrage Association, made the principal plea for linking suffrage with the move for governmental reform.

"Infants, Indians, lunatics, convicts and the residents of the District are not permitted to vote," Darr shouted amid applause from other group representatives.

Three Seal Items Opposed

At the same time, members of the Board of Trade, Merchants and Manufacturers Association and the Federation of Citizens Associations joined in opposing three controversial items in Seal's plan. These groups said they would oppose transfer of hospitals to the Board of Public Welfare, abolition of the present Department of Traffic and Vehicles, and abolition of the District Board of Tax Appeals.

Darr, who is president of the District Bar Association and a leader in the suffrage movement, asked Commissioner George E. Allen to lead voteless District residents in a "new and spirited" fight to gain votes for local residents.

"At no place in this new plan to revamp the local government is there any mention made of suffrage," Darr said.

Vote Discussion Attacked

"We are left out. We, the people who pay the taxes, are forgotten. It is not fair that the Commissioners should go to Congress with a reorganization plan without a recommendation that suffrage be given to District residents and that we have national representation."

Prior to Darr's appearance on the stand, Rufus S. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, stated the question of suffrage "should not be allowed to obscure the need of reorganization." He said the two subjects were "in no wise related."

Lusk joined Wilbur Finch and Harry N. Stull, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, in demanding a city manager-council form of government to replace the present Commissioners.

His reasons for a city manager, as recommended by the Griffenhagen report, are:

It separates legislative and executive functions.

It is the method of operation of practically every successful business in the world and running a city today is a highly specialized business.

Cafeterias Fought

Ringgold Hart, representing the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, said his organization was "strenuously" opposed to extending the Commissioners' power to establish cafeterias or restaurants in District-owned buildings.

The association, he said, was opposed to proposed transfer of municipal hospitals to the Welfare Board, to abolition of the Department of Traffic and Vehicles, and to placing the assessor's office under the new Department of Finance.

Hart also lashed out against levying of taxes by the Commissioners, which is included in Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal's reorganization plan.

The Seal plan calls for retention of the Commissioners and distribu-

Dies 'Thinking About' Inviting Mrs. Roosevelt to Testify

She May Be Asked About Alleged Reds In Youth Congress

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

Chairman Dies of the House Committee on Un-American Activities is "thinking about" inviting Mrs. Roosevelt to appear as a witness, he declared at his Washington home last night.

While three other members of the seven-man committee agreed that they would be glad to hear Mrs. Roosevelt, the chairman said the group had as yet taken no action on the proposal.

The possibility of Mrs. Roosevelt's appearance as a witness arose at her press conference yesterday when she was queried about correspondence relating to the existence of communism in the American Youth Congress.

Emphatically stating that she would not volunteer as a witness, the First Lady told reporters that she would "answer anybody's questions that were asked me, in the interests of truth."

Mrs. Roosevelt's name was brought into Dies Committee testimony last summer when she was said to have entertained officers of the allegedly Communist-dominated Youth Congress.

Meanwhile, the American Student Union (a constituent part of the Youth Congress) and the executive board of the American Federation of Teachers, A. F. L. affiliate, were termed "Communist controlled" in testimony of two witnesses before the committee.

Dr. Henry R. Linville, executive director of the anti-Communist New York Teachers Guild, asserted that Communists have infiltrated into the American Federation of Teachers,

Cruiser Sunk by Deutschland; Soviet Exhorts Finns to Revolt

Moscow Radio Warns Nation It Faces Invasion If Regime Stays

By Henry Shapiro,
United Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Tuesday), Nov. 28. The Soviet radio early today called upon the Finnish people to overthrow their government after delivery of Finland's reply rejecting, in effect, a Russian demand that all Finnish troops be withdrawn immediately from the frontier north of Leningrad.

Many observers in Moscow predicted imminent action against Finland, asserting that Russia in the past 48 hours has gone too far in whipping up mass indignation against the Finns to accept any compromise settlement.

Way Out Possible

If the Soviet Union is already prepared to proceed to the ultimate extreme, it will certainly seize on the Finnish note, with its allegation that Soviet artillery itself fired the shells, as a piece of insolence justifying immediate action.

If, on the other hand, the Soviet Union does not desire to engage in an aggressive war against Finland, Finland's suggestion for a mutual withdrawal, and an investigation through a mixed committee, provides the necessary way out for the liquidation of the incident.

Considering the great disproportion of the forces involved, it would seem likely that the Finns have had very powerful backing today to enable them to tell the Soviet Union to its face that their allegations were absolutely false.

(In London, British Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax informed Soviet Ambassador Maisky of Britain's hope the Soviet-Finnish quarrel will be settled peacefully. Halifax stressed Britain's impartiality, and acted much along the lines of President Roosevelt's recent message to Soviet President Kalinin.)

The radio appeal, repeated several times in the Finnish language, told the Finnish people that they need have no fear of attack by the Soviet Red army if they overthrow the government of Premier Aimo Cajander.

Reds Set to Strike

There were open threats of an invasion of Finnish territory and Red army commanders of the Leningrad military district reported that "our batteries are ready at any moment" to open fire unless the Finns capitulate.

Finland's reply to Russia's virtual ultimatum was delivered at 12:30 a. m. today to Premier Molotoff by the Finnish minister, Baron A. A. S. Yrjoekoskinen.

The Finns apparently had been in possession of their instructions for some time, but were unable im-

Helsinki Offers To Move Troops From Borders If Russia Will

By Lynn Heinzerling,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Helsinki, Nov. 27.—Finland gave a soft answer tonight to turn the wrath of renewed Russian demands.

The little northern country told her big neighbor that on the condition that Russian troops also withdraw, Finland is willing to negotiate for withdrawal of her troops which have been stationed on the border for weeks.

A note, sent tonight by the Finnish foreign minister to Moscow, was the answer to a Soviet protest last night which charged Finnish artillery with killing four Red soldiers and wounding nine at Maimila (Mainila) on the Finnish-Russian border north of Leningrad. The Soviet asked that Finnish troops be drawn back to 16 miles in that area.

Bid for Parley Seen

Diplomatic observers interpreted the Finnish answer as one designed to give the Russians the opportunity to resume negotiations which were broken off by Finland on November 13 when Finland refused to make further concessions to Soviet demands for border revisions and naval bases.

An opportunity was afforded, it was pointed out, for Russia to relieve any embarrassment caused by the firm Finnish stand regarding earlier demands.

This view was based on the belief in some quarters that Russia is not planning to use force, but hopes to use the alleged incident as a form of continued pressure on her little neighbor.

Nevertheless, it was pointed out, the Finnish note tonight rejected any unilateral concessions regarding disposition of troops which might later jeopardize her defense.

Finns Deny Shots

An investigation had shown, said the note, that Finnish soldiers fired no shots yesterday, as the Soviet charged. But it had been observed on the other hand, that firing had occurred on the Russian side.

Details recorded in the journals of the Finnish frontier guards at the time of the shooting before the Russian protest was filed, said the Finnish note, told of bursting shells being seen in a field about 800 meters (about 900 yards) across the frontier on the Russian side.

It added that the cannon, which fired seven shots between 3:45 p. m. and 4:05 p. m.—the same number and about the same time as alleged by Russia—appeared to be placed from a mile to a mile and a quarter away from the hits.

The note, signed by Foreign Minister Erkko, said that "perhaps" it

THE DEUTSCHLAND, fast, powerful pocket battleship, was disclosed to have sunk the British armed merchant cruiser Rawalpindi in a dramatic sea battle off Iceland last Thursday.

260 British Boys Die; Pocketship Wrecks Foe In 40 Minutes; Eludes Pursuing Craft in Dark

By Raymond Daniell

London, Nov. 27.—A terse admiralty statement disclosed tonight that it was Germany's fast and powerful pocket battleship Deutschland which sent the British armed merchant cruiser Rawalpindi to the bottom.

Most of her crew of 300 reservists and volunteers, mostly youths, went down with their blazing ship—its colors flying—after a hopeless fight. Some 260 were lost and possibly 30 captured.

For weeks the French and British navies, which include only five ships the equal of the Deutschland in firing power and speed, have been searching the seas for this heavily armed raider which sank the Stonegate off South America and captured the American freighter City of Flint.

Fortunes of war decreed that when at last the Deutschland came to do battle, it was only to face the smaller guns of a thin-skinned vessel, more accustomed to the quiet waters of the Mediterranean and the Suez Canal than to the raging Arctic waters, where she met her doom.

Rawalpindi's Crew Fought to the Last

With what weapons they had, the crew of the Rawalpindi defended her and while the British navy has lost another ship and nearly 300 men it has added still another chapter to its history.

Supporting the Deutschland was a second Nazi warship, which the admiralty left unidentified, but which the Daily Mail in an unofficial account of the battle, said was the Emden, a cruiser of 5,400 tons, armed with eight 5.9-inch guns.

Not until the Rawalpindi's last gun was put out of action and the whole ship was blazing, except the forecastle and the poop-deck, did the converted merchantman and her crew of peacetime sailors cease their resistance. Then they did not surrender.

The Deutschland poured salvos from her big 11-inch guns into the armed merchantman. The Rawalpindi replied with 6-inchers, the best she had. It was no use.

The dramatic story of the end of the converted merchantman at the hands of the Deutschland is best told by the admiralty itself.

The admiralty communique reads:

"The armed merchant cruiser Rawalpindi, manned by merchant seamen, reservists and pensioners of the royal navy and by men of the R. N. R. and the R. N. V. R., was forming a part of the northern patrol, by which the contraband control of German trade is in force.

"This duty is particularly arduous on account of the long dark nights and severe cold and requires for its performance large vessels of good sea-keeping qualities sapable of enduring the frequent storms.

"At 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon of November 23, when cruising southeast of Iceland on the northern patrol, His Majesty's Ship Rawalpindi sighted an enemy ship. Capt. Kennedy, having examined this vessel through his glasses, said:

" 'It's the Deutschland, all right.'

"The crew was immediately ordered to the action stations and the course was altered to bring the enemy to the starboard quarter.

"Smoke floats were lit and cast into the water to enable H.M.S. Rawalpindi to escape.

Entire Ship Breaks Into Flame

"However, a second enemy ship soon was seen to the starboard. The Deutschland, approaching, signaled the Rawalpindi. When she continued her course, the Deutschland fired a shot across her bow.

"As this warning was rejected, the first salvo was fired by the 11-inch guns of the Deutschland a little after 3:45 p. m. at a range of 10,000 yards (about 5 miles).

"The Rawalpindi replied with all of her four starboard 6-inch guns.

"The third salvo from the Deutschland put out all the lights and broke the electric winches of the ammunition supply apparatus.

"The fourth salvo shot away the whole bridge and the wireless room.

"Both German ships were now closing in rapidly.

"By this time the second German ship had gone around the Rawalpindi's stern, firing from her port side.

"The Rawalpindi maintained the fight until every gun was put out of action.

"The whole ship was ablaze, except the forecastle and the poop deck.

"After about 30 or 40 minutes of this unequal combat, the enemy ceased firing and three boats which had not been shattered by shellfire, one of which became waterlogged, were lowered. Two of these boats, containing over 30 men, were, it is believed, picked up by one of the German ships.

"Eleven survivors, who have been brought in by the Chitral, swam to the waterlogged lifeboat. They would probably have been picked up by the German ships, but for the fact that at about 6:15 p. m., the approach of a British cruiser caused the enemy immediately to withdraw.

"The Rawalpindi continued to burn amidships until 8 p. m. when she turned turtle to the starboard and foundered with all her remaining hands.

"Meanwhile, the British cruiser attempted to shadow the German ships, but a sudden heavy rainstorm and the darkness of night enabled the enemy ships to escape the scene. This account was given in the narrative of the 11 survivors picked up from the waterlogged boat by the Chitral and, of course, is subject to correction in detail.

"It is, however, sufficient to show that H. M. S. Rawalpindi made a most gallant fight against over-

Roosevelt Takes Shears To the Budget

President Works With Fiscal Aide For Three Hours

By Douglas B. Cornell
Associated Press Staff Writer

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 7.—President Roosevelt and his budget officer, Harold D. Smith, used the pruning shears today on the Government's budget for the year beginning next July 1.

How much was shaved off in dollars and cents was not disclosed.

Smith told reporters after a three-hour conference with the President:

"We continued the operations on the budget."

Asked whether they were pruning operations and whether the operations had been a success, the budget director replied with a smiling affirmative and a remark that "we were taking out a few appendices."

Earlier he had said it was "a whale of a job" to whittle down the projected expenditures substantially. He intimated that the President might have something to say about the budgetary situation at a press conference tomorrow.

Deficit Cut Suggested

Although he has projected a $500,000,000 increase in defense expenditures in the next fiscal year, Mr. Roosevelt has suggested the deficit might be trimmed 50 per cent. This year's deficit is expected to run around $3,500,000,000.

There were indications that the total budget for next year's Government expenses had not been finally determined. For the current fiscal year the figure was upward of $9,000,000,000. It appeared, also, that while no final estimate of the Federal income had been made for next year, the Administration was not counting any too heavily on revenues approaching $7,000,000,000.

While the Chief Executive and Smith indicated they were attempting to blue-pencil all parts of the budget, except those for national defense, the particular phases on

Chest Reports At Noon Today On Final Drive

Some Gifts Received In Effort to Make Up $223,000 Deficit

Washington will know at noon today whether a last-minute drive has catapulted the Community Chest campaign over the $2,000,000 goal.

With contributions $223,000 short of the total necessary to meet the city's human needs, volunteer workers last week entered upon a post-campaign effort to prevent a cut in the volume of welfare services next year. Today their reports will be tabulated at Chest headquarters in the Willard Hotel.

D. C. at Bottom of List

"The fate of the Chest is still in the hands of the band of workers valiantly making the rounds among late and lagging givers," officials said yesterday. They disclosed that partial reports from three or four of the soliciting units showed small gains.

"That citizens are being aroused to an awareness of the emergency seems likely from additional gifts that they are now beginning to mail or bring in person to Community Chest headquarters," Chauncey G. Parker, jr., general chairman of the campaign, said yesterday.

According to latest results from 21 cities having welfare goals of $500,000 or over, Washington, officials stated, is at the bottom of the list, if the amount raised in comparison to last year's results is considered, and only one step above the bottom if percentage of goal reached is taken.

Additional Gifts Received

On the campaign's original closing day, November 22, the response to the plea of charitable organizations had totaled but $1,776,805, or 88.8 per cent of the amount needed to continue the present level of welfare services during 1940.

Parker yesterday stressed the fact that pledges and cash contributions will be accepted at the Chest headquarters at the Willard through

Britain Orders Seizure of Nazi Exports

Cargoes Will Be Taken Even From Neutral Vessels

Copyright by New York Times

London, Nov. 27.—King George VI today signed the drastic order in council, which will be issued tomorrow, declaring Germany an outlaw among nations and making her exports subject to seizure by the Allied navies.

Meanwhile, official and unofficial reports today added five more merchant vessels to the list of those lost in sea warfare. Two of them were German.

Most serious loss was that of the Netherlands freighter Spaarndam, which sank in the Thames Estuary after striking a mine. Five persons were killed.

Swiss Steamer Sunk

The two German vessels sunk were the 3,670-ton Borkum, attacked and destroyed by a submarine after she had been captured by the British, and the 300-ton trawler Northbound.

While proceeding to a British port, the British admiralty said, four German crew members were killed on the Borkum, but none of the British prize crew was injured. The Northbound fell victim of a German mine in the Kattegat, off the Danish island of Langeland.

Other sea losses announced yesterday included:

Royston Grange, 5,144-ton British freighter, sunk by an unknown method somewhere in the Atlantic; crew reported saved.

Helena, Swiss steamer chartered from Greece, reputed sunk in the English Channel by a mine. Fate of crew was not disclosed.

Application of the order may be delayed a few days because of a desire here to avoid unnecessary friction with neutrals, six of whom have expressed an anxiety about the effects it will have upon their trade.

While the British are determined to go through with the measure,

'Horse and Buggy' Traffic

Chaos Is Mild Word For M St. Stretch

By Howard F. Wentworth,
Post Staff Writer

It's known as the "Georgetown bottleneck"—that stretch of M street from Twenty-ninth street to Key Bridge.

It's a vital link in the homeward route of thousands during rush hours. It's a narrow, congested thoroughfare typical of a small town "Main street."

After one peak-hour trip through this section of M street, it is easy to believe the contention of many motorists that it has been completely ignored by District traffic planners.

Chaos is a mild word for the M street scene about 5 p. m. on a weekday. Cars are jammed from the light at Key Bridge all the way back to where Pennsylvania avenue empties its load of traffic into the maelstrom. Intersections are blocked by stalled vehicles.

To complicate matters, parking is permitted on both sides of the street during rush hours. Even though M street is extremely narrow through Georgetown and carries double streetcar tracks and heavy bus traffic, parking is allowed all day and night—with a one-hour limit from 8 a. m. to 8 p. m.

It is conceivable that a large portion of peak-time congestion could be relieved by prohibiting parking—thereby opening two additional lanes for mass traffic movement.

Under the present system of timing traffic lights along the thoroughfare, it appears that officials are virtually inviting trouble. The first light is at Twenty-ninth street, the next at Thirty-first. The latter signal stops traffic every 80 seconds.

Then comes a third signal at Wisconsin avenue—one block away. The Thirty-first street light and the one at Wisconsin

See "Toyland," Page 12.

One of the merriest Christmas booms in years is in store for Washington, it was indicated yesterday.

Snowballing steadily since the Roosevelt Thanksgiving, retail trade will take a sudden spurt of considerable proportions not later than December 1, time of the "final gun" in the race of shoppers against Christmas Day, businessmen predicted.

A large factor in the expected boom will be nearly $5,000,000 in Christmas Club savings to be distributed this week to an estimated 79,000 residents who have been banking money in driblets since this time last year.

This distribution of an average of $62 each to 79,000 prospective Yule shoppers is $14 above the average for Christmas savers throughout the Nation, a record excelled by few other cities.

A check of local stores and utilities indicated that Washington Christmas business is at least two weeks ahead of last year's.

"Sales have jumped at least 10 per cent" since November 23, a department store official said. Business always improves perceptibly after Thanksgiving, he added, but "this is unusual," he averred.

Similar gains were reported at other stores. At all of them special preparations for the rush are practically completed. These include hiring of hundreds of extra employes, clerks as well as "shoppers" to aid customers in selecting gifts, gay store decorations inside and out, and

U. S. Reveals Plans to Draft Millions of Men if War Comes

By John G. Norris,
Post Staff Writer

Detailed plans for recruiting and drafting a war-time fighting force of several million men were set forth by the Army and Navy yesterday for the first time in an official Government document.

The Joint Army and Navy Selective Service Committee published a pamphlet tracing the history of America's efforts to raise armies in war, pointed to past mistakes and then outlined its program for a future conflict.

The document, entitled "American Selective Service," is intended to inform members of local civilian boards and reserve and Regular Army and Navy officers of the Nation's plans, it was said.

Rejecting voluntary recruiting as "wasteful and unsatisfactory," the authorities declare that a universal draft patterned after that of the World War forms the only solution of America's defense problem.

"We know from history," the document stated, "that the people will not furnish them (soldiers) for any length of time by voluntary enlistments. The Government must sooner or later use some form of draft . . ."

Plans for building an army on the skeleton peace-time framework, however, would rely on voluntary recruiting in the early days of war. The committee estimates that it would take 60 days for a draft law to be approved and begin operating.

In that period, it is revealed, war plans call for mobilization of 790,000 men. The Army would require 300,-

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

JIM FARLEY & FRANK MURPHY

If you were 46 years old and had a $15,000 job and the chances were 50-50 that it might end abruptly in a year or so, and someone offered you a $20,000 a year job for life, would you try to stiff-arm the offer?

Harlan Miller

This approximately is the predicament of Attorney General Frank Murphy. Incredibly enough, he is likely to tell President Roosevelt that he should not be named to the Supreme Court.

He won't decline, of course, but he won't snatch.

* * * *

When Murphy came to Washington, the Capital suspected his selfless, austere, single-minded, St. Francis-of-Assisi manner was an act.

Now, a year later, it thinks not. He has a disarmingly simple candor which flabbergasts skepticism.

* * * *

Murphy has said he would rather work for the Government at $5,000 a year than earn $50,000 a year in private life. And the most cynical, disillusioned, cold-eyed observers in America are inclined to believe him.

* * * *

So far he has been lawyer, Army captain, assistant U. S. attorney, law instructor, judge, mayor, governor-general of the Philippines, governor and Attorney General, for 22 of his 46 years, and he might spend the last 25 on the highest bench.

"—arena to the cloister"

But he has a profound attachment for his career as administrator, one of the most romantic in American history, and reverent as he is toward the Supreme Court he cannot face the canonization of the Court without misgivings.

* * * *

Secretly, what he would like to do is run again for Governor of Michigan in 1940, partly a sentimental desire to obliterate his defeat last year.

* * * *

At least he toys with the idea as a successful New York journalist might toy with the notion of running a newspaper in the old home town.

* * * *

Strangely, the two great Catholics now on the American political scene, Murphy and Farley, both of them honest, efficient and vastly respected by all who know them, hold opposite views about the liklihood of a Catholic President at this time.

* * * *

Murphy believes that things being as they are, no Catholic today can realistically hope to be elected President. So far as he himself is concerned he has largely renounced the aspiration.

* * * *

Farley, on the contrary, feels that the groundless prejudices of 1928 have abated; that some day a Catholic will be elected President, and that 1940 might be the year. He has not renounced the aspiration.

"—they face the sphinx"

Impartial observers think either Farley or Murphy would do better than Al Smith; that religious prejudice has abated somewhat, and that Smith suffered from disadvantages that had as much to do with his environment and his vernacular as his religion.

* * * *

The ultimate decision rests with that sphinx, the American electorate, and with other political leaders, some of whom fear the loss of a million or more votes in a close election.

* * * *

So far as Murphy and the Supreme Court are concerned, he is almost certain to tell the President that other men are better suited for the high bench, and that he does not believe justices should be selected geographically or as Catholics to succeed Catholics.

And such an appointment is seldom forced on a man over his protestations.

There are too many other names in the hat.

Released by Publishers Syndicate and The Washington Post.

Off the record, the State Dept. is deeply concerned about the ominous Russian-Finnish situation.

Officials are convinced that Russia would not stop with an invasion of Finland, but would march on across northern Scandinavia—and that Germany then would seize Denmark as a "precautionary" measure.

This belief is held in the highest American quarters.

Hull Answers New Attacks On Trade Pacts

Finds Support for Views in Speech By Chamberlain

Secretary of State Hull vigorously defended his reciprocal trade program yesterday in the face of new criticism from members of Congress.

In response to a request for comment on a speech of British Prime Minister Chamberlain Sunday night, Hull issued a statement saying he was "gratified but not surprised" to find that Mr. Chamberlain should emphasize so strongly the idea that "there can be no lasting peace unless there is a full lasting trade between nations" and that "only by an increased interchange of goods and services can the standard of living be improved."

Upholds Philosophy

Saying that the Administration's trade agreements program had been developed in an effort to increase prosperity and employment at home, Hull added that if the philosophy of the program were put aside and "our trade policy is again to be determined solely by the short-sighted and mistaken claims of particular interests determined to win a completely favored position for themselves" then this country would "fall again into the disorderly depression that followed the Hawley-Smoot tariff."

The State Department head described the reciprocal trade program as an instrument for building "mutually beneficial international commerce," and made clear his view that the program might be employed to increase such commerce when the present European war ends.

In connection with the foreign trade situation, the Commerce Department yesterday made public a report showing that, boosted by $117,000,000 in October, the favorable trade balance of the United States for the first ten months of the year reached $681,192,000.

Representing a 14 per cent export rise over September and a 19 per cent climb of imports, total exports last month, including re-exports, were valued at $332,079,000, and imports totaled $215,281,000. Exports were 18 per cent above those of October, 1938, and imports showed a 21 per cent gain over a year ago.

Exports of the ten-month period had a total value of $2,516,978,000. This was within $55,000,000 of all exports last year. Imports through October aggregated $1,835,786,000, which was more than $200,000,000 above total 1938 imports.

Arms Shipments Minimized

Crude rubber, coffee, cocoa, wood pulp, newsprint and silk, officials said, were the items which led the October imports gains.

Shipments of aircraft and parts were unimportant, the department pointed out, because the arms embargo, in effect through October, prohibited sales of arms to belligerents.

Henry F. Grady, Assistant Secretary of State, last night urged that the United States expedite negotiation of new reciprocal trade pacts with Latin-American nations to develop and increase two-way trade that would outlast conditions brought about by the European war.

Grady said in a radio speech that this country's trade with Latin America and other neutral nations would be subject to modification because of the war.

"Any neutral countries," he said, "including those in Latin America, may turn to us for supplies previously purchased from other sources but now no longer available from them.

"The degree in which our exports to these neutral countries will expand in consequence of these changes will depend in large measure upon their ability to sell their products to us in increased quantities. It is for this reason that no opportunity should be lost to provide improved opportunity for such increased exchange of goods through the negotiation of new trade agreements."

Grady cited trade with Cuba as an example of benefits under the reciprocal trade program.

Cuban Purchases Doubled

"Cuban purchases from the United States," Grady said, "have more than doubled since the agreement went into effect. In 1936, 1937 and 1938, Cuban imports from the United States were valued at $66,000,000, and $89,000,000 and at $75,000,000 respectively, representing gains of 193, 292 and 231 per cent over 1933.

Grady said Cuba, the second most important foreign market for United States lard, reduced its duty by successive stages from a rate equivalent to 9.6 cents a pound to 1.5 cents. He said Cuban lard imports from the United States increased from $600,000 in 1933 to $4,000,000 in 1938.

On the other hand the office of Senator Vandenberg made public a letter in which the Michigan Republican suggested to Hull that trade agreements should be worked out "on a realistic basis in essentially non-competitive commodities."

Opposes "Log-Rolling"

Declaring he wanted no return to "the old log-rolling process" of Congressional tariff marking, Vandenberg added that elastic tariffs might be provided which the Tariff Commission could alter from time to time in order to compensate accurately for the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

Hull told his press conference he had not read Vandenberg's letter, but that it would be given full consideration.

Morgenthau Hints at Rise In Debt Limit

$500,000,000 Issue Of 2 Per Cent Bonds Offered to Public

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau yesterday went into the market to borrow $500,000,000 and hinted that Congress would have to increase the $45,000,000,000 public debt limit at the next session.

He offered for sale $500,000,000 of 2 per cent bonds, callable in nine and maturing in 11 years.

Reminded by reporters that the new cash financing would boost the debt limit to nearly $42,000,000,000, or only $3,000,000,000 below the limit, he said he was not worried. He said the problem was for Congress to solve.

Asked if he did not "have them (meaning Congress) in the switches," since it would be necessary to raise the debt limit or increase taxes, he replied:

"They've got to do something if the boys are going to eat. And they are going to eat, don't worry."

First Issue Since 1938

The offering of medium-term bonds is the first direct cash financing of importance since the Treasury borrowed $732,000,000 on December 15, 1938, by sale of long-term bonds and notes.

The continued huge deficit has been made up in part during the interim by financing on behalf of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to enable the corporation to repay the Treasury $568,000,000 which it owed.

In addition, the Treasury has kept the Government machine going by borrowing through "baby bond" sales, from social security and other trust accounts, by drawing down the Government bank accounts, and by drawing on a substantial gold "kitty."

Discount Bills Sold

Moreover, it recently borrowed $150,000,000 directly by sale of discount bills. The Treasury's available cash is now down to about $1,500,000,000.

The borrowing was finally agreed upon at a meeting between Morgenthau and the executive committee of the Federal Reserve open-market committee. The group will consider after an interval of at least two weeks, Morgenthau said, an issue to refund $1,378,364,200 of Treasury notes coming due March 15. Thereafter the Treasury may borrow, on behalf of the Tennessee Valley Authority, between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000 to repay the Treasury money which the TVA owes.

Small Investors Favored

Morgenthau announced that $50,000,000 of the new bonds, over and above the $500,000,000, would be sold to Government investment accounts. It is the first time this has been done. Morgenthau explained, however, that the bonds would simply redeem 2 per cent special notes already held by the accounts.

Taft, Fish, Gannett Make Statements As 1940 Race Grows

Jamestown, N. Y., Nov. 27 (AP).—The Association of New York State Young Republicans, Inc., has pledged its support of Thomas E. Dewey, New York district attorney, for the Republican nomination for President.

Gannett Opens Tour

Spokane, Wash., Nov. 27 (AP).—Frank Gannett opened his western tour today with what members of his party called "virtual declaration" of candidacy for the Republican nomination for President. He followed that up by outlining what he believes will be the principal issues in 1940.

The Rochester, N. Y., publisher and chairman of the National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government, told more than 400 at a pro-American luncheon that the nation's greatest crisis "since Lincoln's time" lay in keeping the country out of war.

Earlier he issued a statement that "no American would decline the nomination (for President) if it were offered to him."

Fish Would Consider It

Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, announced last night that he would "seriously consider" the 1940 Republican nomination if "a real demand" develops for a World War veteran "who believes in keeping out of European entanglements."

In a radio address Fish said that he had been asked to seek the nomination by the Wheeling, W. Va. Post of the American Legion and that he would consider making the fight if the people demand a candidate "who is an isolationist from foreign wars but not from co-operations with other nations in promoting world peace."

Two Senators Attack Hull's Trade Program

'Insidious,' Johnson Says; Wheeler to Vote Against Renewal

By Felix Cotten.

Two Democratic Senators from Western States—Wheeler, of Montana, and Johnson, of Colorado—yesterday launched a vigorous attack on the Administration's trade agreement program.

The occasion was the opening of hearings on a proposed trade pact with Chile before the Committee for Reciprocity Information. Since Wheeler is regarded as a Democratic Presidential possibility, and Johnson has openly indorsed Wheeler for the Democratic nomination, political significance is seen in their action.

Johnson, bitterly assailing the trade treaty program at the hearing on the proposed Chilean agreement, described the Cordell Hull multilateral trade policy as "an insidious formula for breaking down our tariff walls."

To Vote Against Renewal

Wheeler appeared in opposition to a reduction in the excise tax on copper. He told newspapermen afterward that he would vote against renewal of the trade agreements act at the next session of Congress.

Opposition by Wheeler, Johnson, and some other Western Democratic Senators presages a bitter fight on the trade treaty program if it comes up for renewal. The act expires next June 12. If it is permitted to lapse, agreements in effect will continue, but no further pacts will be negotiated.

Republicans in Congress are closely organized for a fight to prevent renewal of the act. With a split in Democratic ranks, defeat of the whole Administration trade policy is regarded as entirely possible.

Discontinuance Predicted

Johnson said he was looking forward to next June because he believed Congress would strike the act "permanently from our statutes." Wheeler said he would "not be surprised" if Congress refused to renew the act. Opposition to the program among Western agricultural interests is particularly strong, he declared.

Two other Democratic Senators—Hayden, of Arizona, and Clark, of Idaho—spoke before the Committee of Reciprocity Information against tariff reductions in the proposed Chilean treaty. Hayden, who said he also spoke for Senator Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, merely opposed a cut in the copper excise tax. He said he was in agreement with the fundamental policy of the trade agreement program.

Clark May Ask Amendment

Clark opposed a cut in the tariff on beans and peas. He did not declare his position on the program itself.

It is understood, however, that he will support an amendment to the act to require Senate ratification of trade pacts. Clark, then a member of the House, voted against renewal when the Administration successfully weathered a fight to terminate the act in 1937.

Seven Congressmen and a number of spokesmen for domestic interests objected to any reduction in the copper excise tax or in the tariff on dried beans. Although the State Department listed 16 dutiable items on which it would consider tariff reductions in negotiating the Chilean treaty, most of the witnesses were concerned only with these two.

Some Favor Chile Pact

The testimony, however, was not entirely on one side. Spokesmen for the National Foreign Trade Council and some exporters appeared as advocates of a treaty with Chile.

Representaive Hook, Michigan; Murdock, Arizona, and Robinson, Utah, all Democrats, objected to a cut in the copper excise tax. Representative Bradley (Republican), of Michigan, opposed reductions in the copper excise tax and the tariff on beans. Representatives Woodruff, of Michigan, and Taber, New York (Republicans), protested against any cut in the bean tariff. Representative Crawford (Republican), of Michigan, opposed reductions in the tariffs on beans, onions and furs.

Letters Protest

Statements or letters protesting against reductions in the copper excise tax, the bean tariff, or both, were submitted on behalf of Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, and Representatives Lea, California, and White, Idaho, Democrats, and Horton (Republican), of Wyoming.

Farm Leaders Study Process Tax Variation

Certificates Would Release Parity Funds For Defense Needs

By Robert C. Albright

Post Staff Writer

A novel "certificate" tax plan designed to finance at least part of the cost of farm subsidies and divert money now spent for parity payments to national defense needs yesterday was receiving Administration scrutiny.

The latest variation of the invalidated processing tax is expected to be laid before the next session of Congress with the backing of Agriculture Secretary Wallace. Just now it is receiving thorough study by AAA officials and farm leaders.

One answer to the demand for increased defense appropriations and a reduced farm-program drain on the Treasury, the plan is being shaped with an eye to safeguarding farm income in wartime, strengthening farm-program compliance and collecting an increased share of the cost from processors and consumers.

To Release Parity Funds

While the President worked on domestic spending cuts at Warm Springs with the budget director, sponsors of the "certificate" plan here said the proposal should return at least the cost of the $225,000,000 unbudgeted parity payments and release that amount or more for national defense.

In its present form the plan would be limited in operation to three major commodities, wheat, cotton and rice. Farm producers of these would receive from the AAA certificates equal in value to part or all of the difference between the farm price and the parity price of the product.

Compliance with the soil conservation program would be made a condition. As soon as a farmer demonstrated he had fulfilled the agreement, certificates could be cashed at a local bank.

A miller or other processor in turn would have to purchase certificates for every bushel of wheat, bale of cotton or pound of rice he processed. A pooling arrangement would be perfected to facilitate sale and purchase of certificates.

Consumers Would Pay

In operation, subsidies to farmers would not clear through the Treasury at all. In effect, processors would be paying farmers their subsidies and the cost probably would be passed on to consumers.

Although no specific values have been fixed for the certificates, figures generally discussed are 30 cents a bushel for wheat (the amount of the old processing tax); 5 cents a pound or $25 a bale of cotton, and 7 cents a pound for rice.

Where goods were processed for export, the cost of certificates would either be refunded to processors or certificates would not be required.

It was estimated the plan might yield $150,000,000 on wheat, another $150,000,000 on cotton and a few added millions on rice.

Over objections by the President, Congress last session appropriated $225,000,000 for farm parity payments after voting $212,000,000 at its previous session without providing new revenue to pay the cost. The total $1,000,000,000 1939 farm appropriation broke all previous farm bill records.

Fills Wallace Conditions

While against processing taxes as such, President Roosevelt for two years has asked Congress to find levies to return the cost of any unbudgeted farm subsidies. His forthcoming budget is not expected to make any provision for parity payments.

The "certificate" plan fills all conditions set by Wallace when he renewed his indorsement of processing taxes to finance such payments, although it has received no official ratification at the department. It has been under constant revision and has received new stimulus from demands for more money for armaments.

Any official presentation of the proposal to Congress will await the attitude of the President, it was said. Meanwhile, it is expected to be put forward as an independent measure, when Congress returns, in advance of the annual drive for farm funds.

Youth Saved After Threat Of Death Leap

2 Policemen Engage Him in Conversation, Third Pulls Him Back

A 25-year-old District man last night was pulled back by police from the eighth-floor parapet of the Victor Building, G street and Ninth place northwest, after he had relayed to a woman acquaintance the message: "Get in here in five minutes or I'll jump."

Samuel K. Culpreth, drug store employe of 1000 block Twelfth street northwest, was dragged to safety by three First Precinct policemen. Patrolman P. F. Little crept up and overpowered the man after Patrolmen H. L. Anderson and W. H. Porter held his attention in conversation.

"She Better Get Here Quick"

"Do you want us to bring your girl friend here?" one officer asked him while the other offered the man a cigarette.

"Yes, but she better get here quick," Culpreth muttered, before he was torn struggling from the parapet.

David Dickerson, 21, elevator boy at the Victor Building, said Culbreth entered the office building about 6 p. m. posing as a building inspector, and ordered Dickerson to take him to the roof.

Climbs Out on Roof

When Dickerson protested that it was unusual to make building inspections at the hour, Culbreth declared, "Well, this is my job."

Taken to the top story, the man raised a window opening on the roof in the rear of the building and climbed out. He then walked to the corner of the parapet overlooking G place, looked over and returned to the window to give Dickerson the woman's telephone number and the message.

Dickerson returned to the ground floor, called the number mentioned, and was told by an unidentified woman, he said, "Theresa isn't here, but tell him to go ahead and jump."

Dickerson then notified police, who made the rescue and took Culbreth to Gallinger Hospital for observation.

In a rooming house in the 1400 block of I street, the address Culbreth gave to police as his, friends of Miss Theresa Glover, 38, said the man had called her in the afternoon to say he was ill.

Two hours before the attempted leap, a note signed "Sam" was received at Miss Glover's home professing his love and revealing the time and place the suicide attempt would take place.

The note, delivered by messenger, stated: "I have loved you. Please send my body home. I will end it all at Ninth and G place northwest at 5:15 p. m. Just know I loved you, Sam."

The landlady at the I street house said that of late the man had made "a nuisance of himself" by repeated visits. She also said that she had threatened to notify police if he didn't discontinue his calls.

"Then he threatened to kill everyone in the house if I got police on him," she said.

Three months ago a man was pulled back from the Victor Building only after he had poised on the ledge for more than an hour.

Progress Seen In Chrysler Peace Talks

200 Colored Employes Enter Plant as 3,000 Pickets Jeer at Them

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Nov. 27.—K. T. Keller, president of Chrysler Corporation, and Philip Murray, vice president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, meeting at a conference table today sought a formula to settle a strike at Chrysler's Dodge plant which has resulted in idleness of 150,000 workers in automotive and allied industries.

They joined other negotiators, including lesser corporation officials and leaders of the C. I. O. United Automobile Workers.

"We are getting along," said Federal Conciliator James F. Dewey after the conference had proceeded for two hours.

1,000 Police on Hand

A few hours earlier, under the eyes of 1,000 policemen and with the jeers of more than 3,000 union pickets ringing in their ears, about 200 colored foundry workers entered the strike-bound Dodge main plant without being molested.

"Let the strikebreakers in," a union spokesman called to the pickets through a loud speaker. "There aren't enough to operate the plant and what the corporation wants is for you to stop them and start a fight."

The Dodge plant normally employs 20,000 men.

Approximately 50 of those who sought entrance to the plant were denied admittance because they had no Dodge workers' badges; another 18 who entered were later sent home when it was found that they never had worked at the plant.

Police on foot and on horseback had massed at the plant after R. J. Thomas, U. A. W.-C. I. O. president, charged that a "back-to-work movement of Negro laborers" was being organized and expressed fear that rioting might result. Eight persons were injured last Friday when 37 workers passed the picket line under a barage of bricks to enter the plant.

Foremen Main Issue

"There was no riot this morning, and there will not be any if you and your union obey the law," Keller told Thomas in a telegram today. "We plan to keep all plants open to employes for whom we can provide work, notwithstanding your efforts to keep them out."

Closing of the Dodge plant on October 6 has made it impossible for Chrysler Corporation to maintain its production of 1940 model automobiles.

Murray, entering the negotiations today for the first time, was expected to clarify the status of the C. I. O. United Foremen and Supervisors Union. When this union's Dodge local last week requested a bargaining conference, the corporation charged that the C. I. O. was "trying to sit on both sides of the conference table" and said it would not sign any agreement with the U. A. W.-C. I. O. until there was assurance that the foremen's demand would not be repeated.

Borgese, Here With Bride, Shy of Politics

Prof Guiseppe A. Borgese and his bride, the former Elisabeth Veronika Mann, spent here yesterday a paradoxical half-hour of their honeymoon.

The professor's reluctant discussion of international affairs—in which he has had some experience—was distilled in a glow of soft love music issuing from the Mayflower Hotel orchestra into the lobby where the couple sat.

Prof. Borgese did not want to talk of politics. He said he was too young as an American for that. And was he interested now in the European situation?

"Ah," said Borgese in a 15-second long sigh of the word. And there it was left, to be presumed that he might be, at the instant, more interested in the soft music.

Fifty-seven years of age, Prof. Borgese was married November 23 to his 21-year-old bride, who is the daughter of Thomas Mann, in the chapel of Princeton University. They have just returned from Charlottesville; will leave soon for Chicago, where he is a professor of romance languages. They were simply resting in the lobby of their hotel, and Prof. Borgese shied as best he could from politics. His dislike of fascism accounted for his presence in America and in the sequences his meeting with Miss Mann, where "it was a case of love at first sight."

So yesterday he could not say how long Germany, the country from which his bride's parents became self-exiles, could last in the war.

"I am neither prophet nor economist," said Borgese. "I do not know of what is occuring, even in Italy. I mean I have no underground lines in there."

Mrs. Borgese said nothing throughout. She watched her husband intently; just sat there with a boyish bob and in a tannish-gray coat suit, looking at her husband and listening to the music.

They headed off in the general direction of the music, after the professor had said some last words about pianissimo on politics.

avenue are the principal offenders. The manner in which they are timed actually breeds delay and tieups.

The Thirty-first street signal makes one complete cycle—from green back to green again—while the light at Wisconsin avenue remains red.

When traffic clears the intersection of Thirty-first street, it travels a block and stops again. Here it is forced to stand still for 1 minute 20 seconds. Cars, still traveling on the green signal behind, pile up. As a result, the corner of Thirty-first is blocked and vehicles are jammed back to the mouth of Pennsylvania avenue.

Nothing Can Move on Second Green

When the Thirty-first street signal completes its cycle from green to green, nothing can move on the second green because the red light at Wisconsin avenue is still holding things up. Bedlam lets loose. Streetcar motormen clang their bells, bus horns blare and annoyed motorists use anything but polite language.

After clearing Wisconsin avenue—and it takes a minimum of 8 minutes to come from Twenty-ninth—motorists may travel two blocks to Thirty-third street. If they happen to hit this light green, they may continue to the Key Bridge signal.

But if the Thirty-third street light is red, they must stop there and again at the Key Bridge turnoff.

With its heavy load of commercial as well as passenger traffic, this section of M street—a principal entrance to the city from Maryland and Virginia—might well stand a bit of study by those who lay out Washington's traffic plan.

Here, as in similar situations outlined in The Post series, some experiments would be welcomed.

ting municipal functions between 11 departments.

Joseph McGarraghy, chairman of the Board of Trade's reorganization committee, outlined the following recommendations:

Support proposals for creation of a department of finance, a department of public works, and a department of personnel and establishment of a civil service.

Keep control of municipal hospitals under the Health Department.

Establish a department of recreation.

Oppose the proposal to abolish the Board of Tax Appeals.

The spokesman for the Board of Trade was strong in his language about retaining the tax appeals body in its present independent form. He also went on record opposing the split-up of the functions of the Department of Traffic and Vehicles.

The Commissioners, McGarraghy said, should send their budget estimates directly to Congress instead of via the Federal Budget Bureau.

Harry Stull, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, said his group also was in opposition to replacing the present coroner's office by that of a chief medical examiner.

Prof. Charles M. Thomas, representing the Federation of Civic Associations, outlined a six-division scheme to replace the proposed 11-department plan. He said municipal functions should be divided between departments of finance, law, public works, municipal service, public safety and public service. He approved proposed merger of Municipal and Police courts into a city court.

General proposals of the Federation of Citizens Associations as presented by Finch, were:

That the legislative and executive functions be separated.

All municipal legislative power be placed in a governing body, all of the members of which should be elected by the people; that the number of members to compose the governing body should be sufficient to represent the geographical sections of the city as well as the various points of view of citizens; qualifications for the body should be the same as set out for Commissioners.

All executive power should be centralized in a single chief executive; such chief executive officer should be appointed by the governing body; his sole qualification for office should be adequate training and experience in administration of municipal affairs; salary of such office should be sufficient to induce competent persons to seek and accept appointment to it.

Approval in principle of the departmentalization of executive functions, but in any event public schools should be controlled by an elective and autonomous school board.

The heads of the several departments should be appointed by and be subordinate to the chief executive officer.

Others who appeared at the hearing yesterday included Dr. George C. Havenner, representing the Northwest Council, who asked for local suffrage; Mrs. Leslie B. Wright, of the Forest Hills Citizens Association; L. E. Williams, president of the Board of Trade; Harry S. Wender, president of the Southwest Citizens Association; A. J. Driscoll, president of the Mid-City Citizens Association; George E. Keneipp of the Keystone Automobile Club, who opposed abolition of the Department of Traffic and Vehicle, and Mrs. Ernest F. Parkinson, of the Women's Bar Association.

First witness this morning will be H. D. Woodson, of the Northeast Boundary Citizens Association. The hearing will begin at 10 a. m.

Dodge Heiress Inherits $10,000,000 Birthday Gift

Frances Johnson Receives Fortune On Reaching 25

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Nov. 27.—Frances Dodge Johnson, accustomed to spend $25,000 a year for clothes and $100,000 to maintain an extensive stable of blue-ribbon horses, was richer by some $10,000,000 in her own name tonight.

Twenty-five years old today, the young heiress to one of the Nation's first automotive fortunes came into control, by terms of her father's will, of her share of his estate.

She was only 7 when John F. Dodge died. His will provided for a trust fund of $40,000,000 for four of his children.

Income from the estate has paid for the education and upbringing of Frances, once known as Detroit's "Number One Glamour Girl." She was married in July, 1936, to James B. Johnson, jr., of Elizabeth, N. J., and Detroit.

From an office in the business quarters of his wife's stepfather in a downtown Detroit office building, young Johnson edits "Swing," a musical publication.

An accounting of the trust funds on December 31, 1938, showed assets totaling $38,891,517 and income in 1938 of $1,365,109.

Those for whom the trust was set up also included Mrs. Johnson's two sisters, Mrs. Winifred Seyburn and Mrs. Isabel Sloan, and a brother, the late Daniel G. Dodge.

Two Agencies May Be Taken From Wallace

Intradepartmental Fight May Cost Him The FCA and REA

By Alfred Friendly

Mounting friction in an undercover intradepartmental fight may result in an executive order early next year removing the Farm Credit and Rural Electrification administrations from the Department of Agriculture and linking them in a single independent agency.

Informed sources said yesterday there was an "even chance" of such an order being issued shortly after Congress convenes. Its purpose would be to correct an admitted error in last summer's reorganization program, transferring both agencies to the Agriculture Department.

The battle revolves around charges that Secretary Wallace has broken promises to keep "hands off" the FCA, that his department's Farm Security Administration wants to use $800,000,000 in potential FCA resources for rehabilitation loans and that FCA is an "Insull Empire" of devious finance. There are rumors that FCA Governor F. F. Hill will resign if departmental control is extended over his agency.

Impingement Reported

Although Secretary Wallace issued a statement "with the concurrence of the President" immediately after the reorganization order that the FCA would continue to operate as an autonomous agency, it was reported that his department had nevertheless impinged on FCA affairs. The result has been the precipitation of an a cumulatively deepening conflict over basic policy.

Other reported sources of friction are a study of FCA operations and organization being conducted by department experts, and failure of the FCA to fall in line with the department's program of land use and withdrawal of marginal land from production.

"Neutral" Explanation

"Neutral" officials give this explanation of a basic difference in policy underlying the feud:

FCA executives believe their loans are sound, self-supporting business ventures, supplying farmers credit at reasonable levels, but think the Agriculture Department's policy is frankly charitable. They fear that as "bad money drives out good," so the department's dominion over FCA would end in diverting private funds to unsound, "eleemosynary" loans.

Department officials, on the other hand, feel that the FCA, with "interlocking directorates and hidden subsidies," in no way contributes to an integrated national crop program, and that the FCA loses an opportunity for improving farming methods by failing to supervise borrowers in what they grow.

The FCA's Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, with an authorized capital of $2,000,000,000, has issued bonds only to the extent of $1,400,000,000, leaving $600,000,000 which could still be raised. An additional $700,000,000 in land bank loans is being currently repaid.

The Farm Security Administration is accused of coveting these funds to use for rehabilitation loans, under which the borrowing farmer is "advised" what to plant.

FCA officials are reported as fearful that Secretary Wallace may recommend revamping of its program on the basis of a study now being conducted by his assistants.

Order Was Surprise

This study is being made, it was learned, despite Wallace's announcement last May that he would exercise "a coordinating supervision in only the broadest and most general way."

The order transferring the FCA to the Department of Agriculture was a recommendation of the Brownlow Committee on Reorganization, acting without the knowledge of other officials concerned, it was learned yesterday.

The order came as a surprise to Secretary Wallace and almost precipitated Hill's resignation. Only the quick trip to Washington of former Gov. William I. Myers, and the resulting "hands off" promise of Wallace, induced Hill to remain in office. On a reversal of this policy, Hill will make good his threat, it is rumored.

Dispute Goes to Congress

The dispute has been carried to Congress, where there are partisans of both sides. Senators Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, and Austin (Republican), of Vermont, have attempted to open up FCA resources to rehabilitation loans. Other legislators, however, are understood to be eager to hold hearings in an effort to contrast "sound" FCA loans with agriculture lending.

Although the Rural Electrification Administration has no part in the quarrel, Federal administrators feel it is primarily a lending organization, and as such, should be taken from the department and joined to FCA.

To Check Constipation Get at Its Cause!

If constipation has you down so you feel heavy, tired and dopey, it's time you did something about it. And something more than just taking a physic! You should get at the cause of the trouble.

If you eat the super-refined food most people eat, the chances are the difficulty is simple—you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean heavy food. It's a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines.

If this common form of constipation is your trouble, eat Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast every day and drink plenty of water. All-Bran isn't a medicine—it's a crunchy, toasted, nutritious cereal. And it will help you not only to get regular but to keep regular, day after day. Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

Yule Boom On, Stores Report

An airline spokesman asserted traffic already is on a par with mid-December last year, height of the 1938 Christmas season. But there are greater things to come—in the near future, he predicted.

For the benefit of thousands of Washington workers going home for the holidays or vacationing in the South, there is to be a speed-up in air schedules. Planes are being pressed into service on runs to far-away points, including Miami and Brownsville, Tex. The already busy traffic of 19 runs per day to New York will be boosted to as much as 21, with planes leaving hourly or better, he said.

Railroads, too, are looking forward to a new lease on life in the Yule season. Two reported that the round-trip day coach limit of 15 days is to be raised to a month to accommodate a flood of vacation travelers.

The Capital Transit Co. revealed it would press into service many additional buses and street cars to avoid "mob scenes" on cars bearing shoppers on their rounds.

The only industry which will not gain in the boom, it seems, is the "vacation cruise" business. Agencies that usually enjoy flush times around Christmas arranging vacation trips to the Mediterranean and other waters now regarded as dangerous were conspicuously silent on the subject of the holidays.

Crew Pumps Fast To Save Vessel

Portland, Oreg., Nov. 27 (AP).—Quaker Line officials tonight received word from the crippled freighter Peter Kerr that the crew was "gaining" on the water that flooded her No. 1 hold after she developed a leak in heavy weather 550 miles from Japan.

The vessel was described as in no immediate danger if the bulkhead held.

Fight Reported Over Naming Wallace Aide

Opposition to Graves Held Reason Post Is Not Announced Vacant

Opposition to a tentative nomination of former Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture was seen yesterday as explaining the department's failure to declare the position open, although its nominal incumbent, Harry L. Brown, has been away from his desk for ten days.

Brown's office, as well as that of the Secretary of Agriculture, have consistently declared that Brown has not submitted his resignation, but informed department circles have privately admitted for two weeks that his departure was taken for granted.

It is believed that Secretary Wallace wishes to withhold the announcement until a successor has been named and that bitter opposition developed from members of Congress and high Government officials who learned he was on the verge of appointing Graves.

Refusal by Graves Reported

In an atmosphere alive with rumors, however, there was a conflicting report that Graves had refused the offer.

Graves, who went out of office last January, was rated as a "New Deal" governor. He vociferously backed the appointment of the then Senator Hugo L. Black for the Supreme Court bench and appointed his wife, Dixie Bibb Graves, to fill Black's uncompleted term in the Senate.

During the fight over Justice Black's confirmation, Graves admitted that he, too, had been a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

He Was a "Jiner"

He told reporters that he had not paid dues for years, and added, "I've always believed that when a man quits paying his dues to any association he is no longer a member. I was a professional 'jiner' in those days. I would join anything."

Chief opposition to Graves, it was learned, came on the score of his Klan affiliation.

Brown's impending resignation, it was reported, has its roots in the department's cotton export subsidy program, which he bitterly opposed. He is believed preparing to accept a managerial position with the Tennessee Valley Authority at Knoxville. At present he is spending his annual leave on his Georgia farm.

Brown received his appointment as assistant secretary on December 31, 1936. He rose from herdsman on an Iowa hog farm to director of his native Georgia's agricultural extension service.

Church Gifts $13.57 Per Capita in 1938

St. Louis, Nov. 27 (AP).—Members of 25 Protestant denominations in the United States gave an average of $13.57 each to the church last year, an increase of 10 cents per capita over the year before, said Dr. Harry S. Myers, of Hillsdale, Mich., secretary of the United Stewardship Council, in his annual report before the association here today.

City Counsel Asked to Fight Curb on Trade

Dean Says Unions Face Prosecution In Restraint Cases

Labor unions are "parties" in construction activities and will be prosecuted by the Justice Department for restraints of trade, Gordon Dean, special assistant to Attorney General Murphy, declared yesterday.

"If unions engage in restraints of trade for objectives other than the improvement of wages, hours, health and safety standards, their activities are not legitimate," he told the annual meeting of the National Institute of Municipal Law Enforcement Officers.

Dean asked the 50 municipal attorneys at luncheon in the Mayflower Hotel to assist in smashing price-fixing by informing the Justice Department when identical bids are received for contractual work in their cities.

Murphy's Plea Read

He read a letter from Attorney General Murphy emphasizing the "need that our cities maintain a militant defense of civil liberties."

The effort, the message said, is imperative to show that democracy can maintain its position without jettisoning its ideals.

Elwood Seal, District corporation counsel, told the afternoon session of the institute, that "Congress favors reorganization of the District Government and the granting of greater powers to municipal authorities here."

Under the present city government, he pointed out, "many trifling . . . inconsequential and annoying affairs have to be considered by the President and Congress." He added, "Congress does not want and should not be bothered about unimportant District affairs."

Legislative power can be delegated to a District organization by Congress, Seal asserted, "if intended to provide for purely local self-government."

"Must Have Vision"

He gave the existing rule for determining District tax rates on property as a working example here of delegation of legislative power.

"Under the rule," he emphasized, "ascertainment of the tax rate is nothing more than a mathematical computation or deduction."

Julius Isaacs, assistant corporation counsel of New York City, stated city attorneys concerned with municipal planning "must have vision and imagination to help interpret the laws . . . to make slums impossible before they are created."

Corporation Counsel Seal was host to institute members at 5 p. m. at a reception at the Burning Tree Country Club, Md.

Maverick Wisecracks As Trial Opens

Attorney Argues For Dismissal of Vote Fraud Charge

By the Associated Press

San Antonio, Tex., Nov. 27.—Eighteen of 26 counts in one of five indictments against Mayor Maury Maverick and three others charging illegal payment of a poll tax were quashed toight. He will be tried on the other eight.

The mayor, his secretary, Richard Jeffrey; Miss Rebecca Taylor and George Glass, Garment Workers' Union leaders, are charged with payment of the State required elector tax for R. L. O'Brien.

The 18 counts were quashed by District Judge Bryce, Ferguson on a motion by Maverick's attorney, Carl Wright Johnson. The judge refused to quash all indictments, and overruled a plea by Maverick's counsel that San Antonio voters condoned acts attributed to the former Representative in the election that restore him to public life.

Jury to Be Chosen

Informed by the defense that the State supreme court had held the word "procure" could not be properly defined in law, the judge dismissed all counts in the true bill, which alleged that Maverick and the other defendants had "procured or conspired to procure the purchase of a poll tax receipt for a citizen."

A jury to hear the evidence against Maverick, who was defeated for a third term in Congress before he was elected mayor in March, may be selected tomorrow.

Maverick's attorney had attacked constitutionality of the Texas poll tax law. The motion was opposed by District Attorney John R. Shook, political foe of Maverick, who upset the San Antonio political machine headed by C. K. Quin.

Before a jury can be selected, Judge Ferguson will hear another defense motion, which is to be offered tomorrow.

Berlin Backs Soviet Demand On Finland

News Service Blames Britain for Resistance, Recalls Poland's Fate

By Otto D. Tolischus.

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, Nov. 27.—Germany today gave full moral support to Russia's demands on Finland, as being nothing more than a big power has the right to expect from little neighboring countries.

At the same time German comments were concentrated on blaming Great Britain for the Russo-Finnish tension, and the fate of Poland was held up as a warning before Finnish eyes.

The German stand was frankly outlined in the semi-official news service Dienst Aus Deutschland, which wrote:

"Although the Reich is not directly affected by the incident there is no doubt that diplomatic quarters here show an understanding for the attitude of Soviet Russia . . . It is impossible to challenge the right of a big power of the rank of the Soviet Union to safeguard its access to the sea, and through a friendly agreement with its neighbors, to assure the vital interests of its defense.

British Policy Blamed

"A Finno - Russian agreement would perhaps have been reached long ago if, as one frequently hears in Berlin, British policy were not behind certain states, encouraging them to make no agreements with other powers that would consolidate peace in certain regions of European politics. In Germany, the role England played when German policy attempted to reach a peaceful agreement and true pacification with her former Polish neighbor is not overlooked."

The German press contributes to this moral support by printing only the Russian version of the events.

"Academic" to Italy

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Nov. 27.—All eyes were turned toward Finland today, but for Italians it is largely an academic question which does not concern their policy.

In fact, the more Russia involves herself in the Baltic the better for Italy, since this means Moscow has no time to turn toward the Balkans.

It has always been felt here that once the Soviets settle the Finnish controversy their interest in the Balkans will become intense. So Italy is chiefly concerned now with how long this present dispute is going to last—and the longer the better.

Mrs. Roosevelt Favors Pay-as-Go Defense Policy

Mrs. Roosevelt believes in paying for the Nation's defense "as we go," she said at her press conference yesterday. Though stressing that she has not discussed with the President the suggested defense tax, instead of borrowing, she believes such a policy would make the public more conscious of what it is paying for, "so we could compare the money spent with what we might have if we had a world which was a peaceful one."

The First Lady tomorrow evening will attend a dinner to be given in New York by officials of The Churchman, religious publication, and will be honored by the group for her "promotion of good will between the people in the United States and those in other countries." Next Monday night at Philadelphia she will accept an award from the Eastern Star.

She will meet at New York today with members of the Good Neighbor Committee. On Saturday, she will accompany the President to the Army-Navy football game at Philadelphia, and next Monday will go to Annapolis to speak to wives of officers at the Naval Academy.

German Patrols Raid Three Times East of Moselle

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Nov. 27.—Twice yesterday and once today in that vague region "east of the Moselle" German patrols were active.

Today's action seems to have been somewhat more important than mere patrol work. It was described in the evening communique as "a local infantry and artillery action during the morning."

The French yesterday sent out a "light reconnoitering element" on patrol in the Vosges district. This party advanced nearly 2,000 yards through a forest before it encountered a German outpost hidden behind a ridge. For a few minutes the two patrols threw hand grenades at each other, and the French withdrew.

Germans Report Scouting

Berlin, Nov. 27 (AP).—Germans were told today of scouting on the Western Front in which a Nazi detachment went "sneaking like Indians through advanced posts to the Maginot Line."

D. N. B., official German news agency, used that description. The high command reported only "in the west, except minor artillery annoyance fire, no noteworthy fighting activity."

Army Boredom Seen as Peril to French Morale

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Paris, Nov. 28.—An unexpected menace is facing the French army, military writers realized today. The menace, divulged in soldiers' letters home, is ennui—boredom.

Despite reports from Holland indicating a revival of fears of a Nazi invasion, lateness of the season leads most military writers to conclude there will be no important operations until next spring.

As the military correspondent of Le Temps writes today:

"A great number of our regiments, mobilized for three months, have never seen action . . . 'ennui' is a commonplace enemy in appearance, but it is insidious, and it would be wrong to underestimate its power because it would be capable in the long run, if it was not vigorously fought, of dealing a blow to morale and harming discipline."

mediately to make an appointment with the proper officials.

Mass indignation was whipped up among workers, students at peasants throughout yesterday and last night and resolutions by the scores were passed saying, "We will hurl back the Finnish militarists and provocateurs of war."

"If the Finns are going to force us to act we will strike and in a short time defeat the enemy on his own territory," said a resolution of Soviet guards in Soviet Karelia on the border.

Military reports indicated that Soviet military concentrations were ready at a moment's notice to strike across the border, if necessary, after Sunday's alleged artillery attack by Finnish forces killing and wounding 13 officers and men of the Red army somewhere along the 50-mile frontier on the Karelian Isthmus about 22 miles north of Leningrad.

[All Red army leaves were canceled tonight in the Leningrad military zone adjoining Finland, according to reports reaching Stockholm, International News Service said.]

[The Soviet Baltic fleet and the Red air force staged gigantic maneuvers in and over the Gulf of Finland and the Leningrad area today, the reports, coming from Moscow, said.

[These advices also said that the Finnish Legation in Moscow was being rigidly guarded by Soviet secret police as anti-Finnish mass meetings are being staged in the Russian capital and other Soviet cities.—Editor's note.]

The indignation, threats and demands on the part of the Soviet were strikingly reminiscent of those of two months ago, in the days before the Red Army invaded eastern Poland.

Today's resolutions warned the "Finnish adventurers" that they have "the same fate as the Polish pans (noblemen) awaiting them if they do not respect the will of the Soviet government."

The radio blared almost constantly the statement that Finland, with not more than 500,000 meagerly equipped men under arms, was "trying to provoke war" against the Soviet Union and its army of millions.

Finns Deny Firing

The Soviet ultimatum-like demand would compel the Finns to abandon their Mannerheim line of fortifications. It was served on the Finnish minister here, Baron A. A. S. Yrjoekoskinen, a few hours after Finnish artillery allegedly opened fire on Red army troops along the frontier, killing and wounding 13 Soviet officers and soldiers.

(The Finns, categorically denying that the Finnish artillery had opened fire Sunday afternoon as charged, suggested in their note that a joint Finnish-Soviet commission investigate the frontier allegations.)

At the artillery headquarters of the Leningrad military district a demonstration occurred and the Red army troops adopted a resolution saying they were ready to strike at any moment, awaiting only orders from Stalin and War Commissar Voroshiloff.

"We strictly adhere to the government's orders and have not thus fired a reply to the Finnish attacks," the resolution said.

"But we are ready at any moment to stand up in defense of our beloved fatherland and shower the heads of the mad provocateurs with 'Voroshiloff telegrams' of powerful cannon."

Another resolution by troops at Leningrad said that once Russia struck it would be "too late" for Finland to attempt to negotiate and that "no crocodile tears or clowns' grimaces will help the murderers."

An artillery battery commander addressing his troops said:

"Our comrades have been killed and wounded. If the Finnish government thinks it will get off lightly it is very much mistaken.

"Our batteries are fully prepared . . . not one enemy plane will be able to break through to Leningrad."

(Finland has only about 250 military planes, many of them obsolete.)

Typical of the resolutions were such threatening phrases as:

"We are ready to strike three decisive blows for each provocative blow of the Finnish war clique.

"The clowns managing the fate of the Finnish people must be reminded of the sad lot of the ill-starred former rulers of Poland."

Moscow Excited

When the Soviets used the term "clown" they spoke of Finnish Premier Cajander, whose resignation was demanded by the Communist Party organ Pravda Sunday as a requisite for a peaceful solution of the Russian military and territorial demands against Finland.

The streets of Moscow were alive with excitement, much like the days preceding the invasion of Poland. People lined up at newsstands and around broadcasting loud-speakers to listen to the news developing from the charges that Finnish guns had fired on Russian troops.

"Artillery shots against the Red Army prove incitement to war," said a resolution passed by workers at the Hammer and Sickle plant, largest metallurgical plant in Moscow. The workers pledged increased production of war supplies and defense materials.

whelming odds and went down with colors flying.

"The search for the two enemy warships is continuing in tempestuous weather both by night and in the brief hours of daylight."

The episode showed that the Deutschland is preying on ships in the far northerly routes where long nights and short days make the dangerous work of a naval raider, far from home, more effective and somewhat less perilous.

Naval circles conceded that the Deutschland's long-ranging feats already have placed her in the category of imperial Germany's boldest and most famous raiders of the World War. Thus far no clew was visible that might lead to identification of the warship accompanying the Deutschland.

Determined to Run Down Warship

The battle, marked the first authentic news of the Deutschland since October 9 when she captured the City of Flint.

Some British naval experts said tonight that, now that the approximate location of the Deutschland's wanderings has been discovered, there is prospect of a great naval battle because the British are determined to run down the 10,000-ton sea terror.

Among the victims of the Deutschland, as listed by British naval authorities, were the steamer Stonegate, which was shelled and sunk four days before the capture of the City of Flint and the Norwegian steamer Lorentz W. Hansen.

When the Lorentz W. Hansen failed to sink quickly enough, a torpedo was fired into her although the Deutschland commander was reported to have said:

"One torpedo is worth more than this paltry craft."

Text of Finns' Note to Russia

By the Associated Press

Helsinki, Nov. 27.—The text of the Finnish note delivered to the Kremlin tonight follows:

The Finnish government speedily made an examination of the incident of frontier violation alleged to have taken place.

It established the discharge of cannon shots you mention in your letter did not take place on the Finnish side. The investigation showed instead that on November 26, between 3:45 p. m. and 4:05 p. m., firing was going on on the U. S. S. R. side in the vicinity of Maimila (Mainila), which was the place mentioned by you.

On the Finnish side, it was possible to see the site of bursting shells on the open plain at Maimila, which was situated only 800 meters (about 900 yards) from the frontier behind an open field.

From the sounds caused by the seven charges which were heard it was possible to establish that the gun or guns which were used were situated about one and one-half to two kilometers (just under a mile to a mile and a quarter) southeast from the place of the bursting shells. Observations concerning the shots were written in the diary of the frontier guard when the event occurred.

Thus the question is that of an accident which perhaps happened on the Russian side in connection with exercises and which according to your information unfortunately claimed a loss of lives. Therefore, my duty is to deny your protest and to establish the fact that from the Finnish side no hostile actions toward Russ- have taken place.

I wish ot remark that on the Finnish side mainly only frontier guards have been stationed, and not such artillery whose range would reach the other side of the frontier. Consequently, although there is no concrete reason to remove troops from the frontier line in the maner you suggested, my government nevertheless is ready to deliberate the Russian proposal with the intention that troops be removed by both sides to a fixed distance from the frontier. I have noticed with satisfaction your intimation the Soviet government does not intend to exaggerate the importance of a frontier incident which they, according to your letter, at that time believed had taken place.

I am glad to have been in position to remove the misunderstanding a day after having received your letter.

In order that no obscurity whatever might remain in any circumstances, my government suggests the Karelian Isthmus frontier agents of both countries be instructed to investigate jointly the incident in a manner regulated by the treaty of September 24, 1938, concerning the frontier agents.

Foreign Minister.

was an accident on the Russian side, and that "therefore my duty is to deny your protest and to establish the fact that from the Finnish side no hostile actions toward Russia have taken place."

On the Finnish side, mainly frontier guards are at the border, it said, and not such artillery as would reach across the Soviet border.

Government Remains Calm

"Consequently, although there is no concrete reason to remove troops from the frontier line in the manner you suggested, my government nevertheless is ready to deliberate the Russian proposal with the intention that troops are removed by both sides to a fixed distance from the interior."

A proposal was made that the incident be investigated by a frontier commission already set up for such purposes.

Some Finns took a grave view of Russia's latest diplomatic move, but the government remained calm.

Disagree Over Soviet Aims

One source close to the government went so far as to suggest the Russians might have manufactured the incident as a pretext either for using force or as a means of reopening negotiations.

Optimistic Finns pointed out that the Russians had merely "proposed" withdrawal of Finnish troops, not demanded it, while others regarded the tone of the Russian note as threatening.

Worried residents of the Finnish capital, some of whom had brought their families back to the city from the country, debated whether they should send their families away again.

Balts Attack Finland

Riga, Latvia, Nov. 27 (AP).—Newspapers in the Baltic countries, following the lead of Russia's press, today launched a campaign against inland.

Latvia's semi-official Briva Zeme led by upbraiding Finland for attempting to pretend she is not a Baltic state in the same boat with Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, where Moscow gained army and navy air bases two months ago.

The newspaper added the "presence of foreign troops in territory of the Baltic states is, of course, a complicated problem" but "good will and mutual confidence will make it possible to overcome all difficulties."

Cleveland Jobless Cry They'll Eat by 'Own Authority'

Cleveland, Nov. 27 (AP).—A thousand shouting unemployed persons stormed a city council meeting tonight and asserted they would obtain food "on our own authority" unless the city takes immediate steps to restore recently curtailed relief services.

"That is anarchy," sharply retorted Mayor Harold H. Burton.

The group's demand was voiced by C. B. Cowan, head of an Association of Unemployed Clevelanders. He did not elaborate on its plans.

"It must not be permitted in America and will not be permitted in Cleveland," Burton said. "We have been meeting this relief situation and we will meet it."

"If it is necessary to destroy the city's services, that will be done. Relief comes ahead of every obligation."

Oakland Port Strike Settled

San Francisco, Nov. 27 (U.P.).—A strike which had paralyzed the port of Oakland for the last 17 days was settled tonight, and a spokesman for the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (C. I. O.) announced the port would be reopened at midnight.

Settlement came shortly after Gov. Olson announced he was contemplating State operation of the Oakland and San Francisco ports.

Fair Labor Code Urged For Americas

C.I.O. Man at Havana Parley Demands Workers Dictate Peace

By the United Press

Havana, Nov. 27.—Enactment by all American countries of "fair labor standards for the Western Hemisphere" was proposed today at the second Inter-American Labor Conference by James B. Carey, one of two United States worker delegates.

Carey, president of the C.I.O.'s United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, proposed that the governing body of the International Labor Office, sponsor of the conference, communicate to the 21 American nations and Canada the importance of establishing corresponding labor standards.

The resolution urged establishment of legal machinery to protect the right of association of workers and employers; the fixing of a minimum wage rate sufficient to permit a "reasonable standard of life"; establishment of a 48-hour work week and, wherever possible, a 40-hour one, and abolition of child labor below 14 years, and below 16 wherever possible.

Closer Cooperation Urged

The resolution also urged closer economic and financial cooperation among the American nations of accredited worker and employer representatives.

Carey demaded organized labor's right to a "determining voice in fixing the terms of peace settlement following the present war."

"Only thereby," Carey said, "can we assure a peace settlement unlike that of 1919, that will be based on justice for all people and all nations."

Carey also urged equal representation of labor on administrative agencies applying social legislation as well as agencies effecting compliance with international agreements on labor questions.

George Harrison, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks and the other United States worker delegate, said a "free association of workers is indispensable to the orderly functioning of a profit economy, providing a balance wheel between those who produce and those who own the tools of production."

Altmeyer Addresses Parley

The present European war, Harrison said, was born of economic chaos and human misery caused by failure to provide the bases necessary for an enduring peace and human progress.

Arthur J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board, who is Government representative and head of the United States Delegation, advocated enactment by the American nations of health insurance laws.

He said that in a "democracy" there is no reason to fear that advance of labor legislation means the intervention of Government in private fields.

Declaring that some persons in the United States have indicated this fear, Altmeyer said:

"Certainly in a democracy such a fear is groundless since there will be only as much intervention as the people themselves decide is in the public interest."

U. S.-Born Polish Countess Slain By German Tank

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Nov. 27.—How an American-born Countess Michalowska—formerly Margaret Crosby, of Buffalo—was killed by Nazi tank fire during her flight from Warsaw was told tonight by Count Joseph Michalowski, a Polish officer, who escaped to Paris from a Soviet prison.

The countess and three other women drove in a peasant cart along the Warsaw-Lowicz route, September 19, long after the Polish troops had left the place. Suddenly a Nazi tank approached the cart and without warning fired several machine gun rounds.

The countess was seriously injured and asked for help in English. This enraged the Germans, who later, it is declared, shot her because they thought the countess was an English spy.

Until late in the evening the countess' wounds had not been dressed. She was brought into a hospital but died the same night—and buried in one of the numerous common graves at Blonie.

Goebbels Pleads For Optimism

Berlin, Nov. 27.—Speaking before 3,000 workers, artists and wounded soldiers, Propaganda Minister Goebbels today told Germany that "we now are one people—we want to become a world people."

"No war can be won without optimism," he stated. "It is just as important as cannon and guns. For, particularly in the critical hours, optimism assists in the overcoming difficulties and the brushing aside of obstacles. We want to cultivate this optimism in all our people."

Daladier Calls Parliament, Seeking Vote of Confidence

Session to Convene Thursday; Premier Asks Extension of Decree Powers; Major Dispute Expected Over Finance

By the Associated Press

Paris, Nov. 27.—The French Parliament tonight was called to meet Thursday, in its first session of the war, to approve the Daladier government's conduct of the war and to extend its power to rule by decree.

The session also will vote on a civil budget to carry the war into 1940. The budget will be more than double that of 1938.

Premier Daladier's decree powers expire on the day Parliament meets. For almost three months Daladier, holding the portfolios of minister of war, national defense and foreign affairs as well as premier, has been prosecuting the war against Germany.

Now he has decided to give an account of his leadership to date, and to present a new budget.

Finances Major Issue

Finances are expected to provide the major battle of the session. Finance Minister Reynaud has drafted an ordinary budget for 1940 calling for expenditure of 340,000,000,000 francs ($7,678,000,000 at current exchange rate).

The total 1939 budget was only 162,364,000,000 francs ($3,572,008,000). This included ordinary expenditures of 66,364,000,000 francs ($1,460,008,000), extraordinary expenses of 27,000,000,000 francs ($594,000,000) and the September war budget of 69,000,000,000 ($1,518,000,000).

This war budget was approved unanimously by Parliament at its last session, held September 2, the day before France and Britain declared war on Germany.

Government Confident

Complete confidence was maintained in government quarters that the cabinet would win a strong vote of confidence and push through next year's budget before January 1. The cabinet was called to meet with President Lebrun Wednesday evening in a conference preliminary to the parliamentary session. Lebrun conferred with Daladier this afternoon.

In the first two months of the war Parliament has functioned through its committees and the delegation of presidents of political groups of the chamber, which have received frequent accounts of operations from the ministers.

There has been occasional criticism of the government from Parliament on minor issues of the war. The chamber delegation of presidents of political groups issued a communique after its meeting of October 30 listing a series of points on which it was at odds with the government.

Requisitions Protested

It protested against "excess of requisitions in general," such as the taking over of vehicles, horses, houses and ships, and asked "acceleration of payment for requisitions."

It called for a reduction of the zone submitted to army control and asked that the older classes of mobilized soldiers be released from the colors.

It also urged freer distribution of permits for travel in the army zones and expressed disapproval of any further removal of population from cities and towns behind the lines.

Two Classes Released

The government already has taken steps to satisfy the legislators. Men who started their military training in 1909 and 1910 have been released, and restrictions on circulation, communications and lighting have been relaxed.

The government has strengthened its hand for the coming encounter with Parliament by dissolving the Communist Party following Soviet Russia's conclusion of a nonaggression pact with Germany and the Russian invasion of Poland.

Dies May Call Mrs. Roosevelt

but he declared that two Washington teachers' locals were among those that "have consistently carried on the fight against Communist control."

The two Washington unions are Local No. 8, of the public school teachers, and Local No. 27, of the colored teachers union, Dr. Linville said.

First witness in the current inquiry, which will deal with subversive activities in education, was Maj. Hampden Wilson, "loaned" to the committee by the Veterans Administration.

Permanent Committee Urged

"In practically every institution of higher learning and in many city schools," Wilson testified, "it was found that the American Student Union was the agency used in spreading communism."

(The Associated Press reported in a dispatch last night from New York that Joseph P. Lash, national secretary of the A. S. U., denied that the organization is dominated by Communists and added that its aim is "to voice the student's concern for his own and his country's welfare.")

In still another Dies committee development yesterday, Representative Thomas (Republican), of New Jersey, urged that "the best interests of our democracy can be preserved by making the committee . . . permanent." Thomas, a member of the committee, warned against attempts at the next session of Congress "to force discontinuance" of the committee.

"Only those sympathetic to the aims of foreign isms will join the united front to smear the committee," he concluded.

Mrs. Roosevelt's indication of willingness to take the witness stand was expressed in answer to questions about correspondence between her and Alfred M. Lilienthal, of New York.

Suggested by Lilienthal

Lilienthal, a leader of a group that has seceded from the American Youth Congress, had suggested that he and Mrs. Roosevelt appear before the Dies committee as opposing witnesses on the subject of Communist domination of the Congress.

The First Lady, who stated she did not believe the congress was Communist-controlled, told her press conference that she would not care to take sides as a witness in opposition to Lilienthal, but would be willing to testify.

The hearings on communism in education were held yesterday by a sub-committee headed by Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama. Dies, who recently returned to Washington from a trip South and West, was resting at his home here.

Maj. Wilson, the committee investigator, opened the hearings by reading a statement dealing largely with the Student Union. The committee has consistently refused to permit witnesses to read statements into the record, but Starnes explained that this was to be regarded rather as a "summarization."

Wilson alleged that the Communist Party has set up "a very definite program for the teachers of the United States," and quoted an article from the Communist of May, 1937, suggesting that "a people's movement around the schools" can transform them "ultimately into forums for the revolution . . . It can be seen from this how important it is to build the American Federation of Teachers."

A "Noisy" Minority

Asserting that "a teachers' union" has been organized in many parts of the country, Wilson said "many of the leaders of these unions are, according to common report, zealously trying to comply with instructions issued by the party."

The A. S. U., Wilson declared, is always a "noisy" minority, always obtaining representation on the school paper, always opposed to the R. O. T. C., and "ever seeking to bring 'red' speakers to the campus."

Wilson gave several specific instances of alleged subversive activities in educational institutions, but in no case mentioned names and places. A committee spokesman declared that the statement purposely was couched in general terms, and that subsequent testimony would reveal the details.

Communist tactics include "democratization of the faculty," criticism of administrative authorities, establishment of "so-called 'Liberal Clubs,'" both on and off campus, "revamping of textbooks and courses "to show the glories of communism as developed in Russia," movements to liberalize regulations, participation in industrial controversies off the campus, and infiltration of student government and parent-teacher associations, Wilson said.

Visits Many Schools

Among the institutions Maj. Wilson said he visited in his eight-month investigation were Columbia University, Barnard College, Presbyterian and Jewish Theological seminaries in New York, New York University, College of the City of New York, and the universities of North Carolina, Kansas, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Chicago, Nebraska and Washington. He also interviewed school authorities in numerous cities.

Navy to Build Air Base on Jamaica Bay

$500,000 Port Would Accommodate 24 Flying Boats and 400 Men

Copyright by New York Times

New York, Nov. 27.—The United States Navy will construct at once a base for at least 24 flying boats on the shore of Jamaica Bay adjoining Floyd Bennett Field, it was announced today.

Announcing that the city would cede the site to the Navy Department, Mayor LaGuardia pointed out New York would be glad to have the Navy planes there for defense in case of an attack.

Rear Admiral Woodward, commandant of the Third Naval District, said the base would be used primarily for a neutrality patrol, with seaplanes keeping watch over the waters of this area to see that no belligerent nation violates the neutrality law or President Roosevelt's proclamation.

The base will cost from $500,000 to $600,000. There will be two large hangars to house two independent squadrons, and about 400 men will be stationed there. It is hoped the base will be ready for operation March 1.

The new base will be immediately alongside the Coast Guard base at Floyd Bennett Field, which also fronts on Jamaica Bay. In a national emergency the Coast Guard base would be merged with that of the Navy.

The hangars are to be of the same type as will be constructed at seven other naval air bases along the coast. These include Argentum, in Boston Harbor, now a naval reserve base, and Quonset Point, on Narrangansett Bay, R. I., where a new base will be built. There is a National Guard reservation at Quonset Point.

New hangars also will be built at Key West, Fla., where the Government proposes to reopen an air base, and at Jacksonville and Banana River, both in Florida. There will be others at San Juan, Puerto Rico, and at the United States naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Nazis Charge British 'Lie' Betrayed Poles

Answer to 'Blue Book' Says Warsaw Knew Nothing of 'Negotiator'

By the United Press

Berlin, Nov. 27.—The German government said tonight in a 3,000-word announcement that the recent British Blue Book on the origins of the war contains indisputable proof that Great Britain played a "treacherous, two-faced game" which forced Poland into war with Germany.

The German reply asserted that on August 28, three days before the Nazi invasion of Poland, the British government committed a "forgery merely in order to gain time" and stave off the war for a few days.

This "forgery and sheer lie," according to the government statement, was a memorandum delivered to Germany from British Foreign Secretary Halifax saying that Poland would send a plenipotentiary to Berlin to negotiate a settlement of Germany's demands.

Charge "England Wanted War."

Actually, it was contended, Poland had not consented to any such measure and was feverishly preparing for war.

"England wanted war against Germany," the German government said. "Germany already has been able to show the world proof after proof of that, and England has been unable to make any reply to this proof.

"She has only been able constantly to produce lies and misrepresentations."

The British blue book was described as "an unsuccessful attempt to escape responsibility—that is to say, a feeble attempt at misrepresentation of the truth."

Hold France "Deceived" Also

Germany said these five points were "proved" by the British Blue Book:

Lord Halifax "grossly deceived" the German government by asserting that he had received word from Warsaw that the Poles were ready for negotiations with Germany.

Sir Howard Kennard, British Ambassador to Warsaw, delayed carrying out instructions from London to ask the Poles to enter into negotiations and this "intentional" delay was so long that the time limit fixed by the Nazi ultimatum to Poland elapsed.

The Polish government refused to negotiate on the basis of "the moderate German proposals" because it believed in the British assurance of military aid which failed to materialize.

France, anxious for a Polish plenipotentiary to go to Berlin, "also was deceived by England" because the British "in reality had done nothing to bring about the negotiations on which peace or war depended."

Because of the workings of British diplomacy the Poles did not send negotiators to Berlin and the Polish ambassador here, Josef Lipsky, was "not allowed to discuss a peaceful settlement."

Army and Navy Prepare New Draft Plan

000 men the first month and 200,000 the second, the Navy 125,000 men each month, and the Marines, 25,000 the first 30 days and 15,000 the second. In April and May of 1917, it was noted, only 290,000 were enlisted in all three services.

Draft Bill Prepared

To meet this emergency, the plan includes what is described as the "civilian effort"—an intensive recruiting program handled by State Governors and local committees of prominent citizens.

"The 'civilian effort'," warns the committee, "cannot be puffed into an alternative to selective service. It is only a makeshift, adopted more in the hope than in the conviction that it will meet the situation for a couple of months. . . . The 'civilian effort' is a stopgap."

A proposed selective service law has been drafted by War and Navy Department experts, which authorizes the President to register, select and induct into the land and naval forces from such age groups between 18 and 45 as he prescribes and to promulgate necessary regulations to give the law effect. Only members of the armed forces and foreign diplomatic personnel are excused from registration.

"Each inductee becomes subject to military law upon the date and hour stated in his induction notice and remains liable to serve for six months after the date set by the President as the end of the emergency.

Bounties Forbidden

"Bounties, substitutions and purchased exemptions are forbidden. Only the highest Federal and State officers are exempted and these only while in office. The President is authorized to defer service for essential occupation or dependency; members of recognized religious sects, whose tenets are opposed to war, are exempt from combatant service only.

The President also would be authorized to set up a selective service system, including local boards and appeal agencies, to provide for classification of individuals including investigation of their private affairs, and establishment of areas for States and districts.

Regulations to carry out the proposed law also have been prepared, it was said. They provide for the President to set registration day and, probably, require all men between 21 and 31 to register in their voting districts. The registration cards would be delivered to county boards and names would be drawn by lottery in Washington, as in 1917, to determine the order of calling.

Only Four Classes

Following procedure adopted later in the World War, every registrant would receive a questionnaire and, upon the local board would classify him tentatively. They are:

"Class I, available for service immediately. Class II, deferred because of the importance to the Nation of the service being rendered in civilian life. Class III, deferred because of dependents in the meaning of the law; Class IV, deferred by law or because induction for obvious reasons, such as insanity, physical unfitness, menage, etc., is undesirable."

"The ruling principle," continues the document, "is that every registrant in Class I until cause for deferment is positively established."

The local board would have wide discretion, and when they made determinations in cases, registrants would be given physical examinations and classified finally. Either the individual or the Government might appeal to a higher board—one for every 600,000 population. A number of State advisory bodies would watch over classifications and appeals, to prevent favoritism and corruption, protect essential industries and pass on doubtful physical cases.

"Endless Appeal" Barred

"While every registrant is entitled to fair treatment, including review of his case by the appeal board," the committee states, "the war is not going to be won while every slacker resorts to endless appeals to higher and higher authority and thus delays entering the service. After all, he owes military duty, and any deferment an act of grace by the Government. For this reason, appeal beyond the appeal board to the President is difficult."

Shipping Scandal Recalled

A considerable portion of the document is devoted to review of other systems used in American and British history to provide armies. It recalls that because the State militia often refused to leave their States' borders and the voluntary recruiting of a national army fell far short of needs, the Revolutionary War dragged on for seven years, during which the British forces totaled only a tenth of the number of Americans under arms.

The Mexican War, it was stated, was "greatly prolonged" because 40 per cent of Gen. Scott's army insisted on going home in the middle of his advance to Mexico City, enlistments having expired. An unsavory picture of "manhunts," riots and rich men hiring substitutes in the Civil War drafts was portrayed.

The draft system of 1917—basis of the new plan—as criticized in some details. Granting of blanket industrial exemptions was hit, that given to men in shipyards being called a "national scandal."

Kuhn Romance Like Caesar's, Lawyer Says

Defense Charges 'Politics' Inspired The Prosecution

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 27.—Fritz Kuhn's trial for misappropriation of $1,217 from his German-American Bund entered a last, long forensic stage today, with his attorney asserting that it had been a "political" prosecution by the office of "the man who may be President of these United States."

This reference to District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey was qualified by Defense Counsel Peter L. F. Sabbatino, however, with the declaration that it was not upon Dewey himself but upon his subordinates that the responsibility should fall.

Charges Publicity Seeking

Making his closing argument to the jury, Sabbatino accused the State of having had motives of publicity in offering evidence that Kuhn had written extravagant protestations of love to Mrs. Florence Camp, although he was and is a married man.

The defense attorney concluded late in the day, and the State's argument will come tomorrow.

Such great figures of history as Napoleon and Julius Caesar, Sabbatino declared, had extra-marital affections, and he compared the middle-aged Bundsfuehrer to these and others of the "greatest of men who have fallen for women although they were married."

"He liked Mrs. Camp," Sabbatino shouted at another point, "or if you will, he was in love with her. What of it? What did that have to do with it?"

Of the money Kuhn stands accused of having taken from the bund, the prosecution claims $717 went for removing Mrs. Camp's furniture about the country.

Faces 15 Years

Charges of first and second degree larceny in this connection, and charges of larceny and third-degree forgery for Kuhn's alleged misappropriation of $500 in legal fees ostensibly paid by him to an attorney for bund legal services, were all that remained for the jury's decision after Judge James G. Wallace struck out five other counts of the original indictment.

As to his cry of "politics" in the case, Sabbatino recalled that he had put Dewey himself on the stand as a defense witness, adding:

"I have no criticism of Mr. Dewey. Some of his assistants in my opinion were unconsciously misled into doing things in this case that on sober thought they will regret."

If convicted on all counts, Kuhn would be liable to a total sentence as high as 15 years.

Britain Orders Nazi Exports Seized

which they hope will shorten the war, there is every desire here to temper the possible hardships on such countries as Holland and Belgium, which not only have suffered serious commercial losses but feel that their security is menaced.

It was learned today that as soon as the order in council has been gazetted, notes will be sent to each of the neutral embassies and legations in London, giving not only the text of the order, but explanatory details.

These will be entirely separate from any replies which may be made to the notes and oral objections which have emanated from Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Italy and Japan since Prime Minister Chamberlain first announced that the measure not taken in the last war until 1915 would be adopted now in retaliation for the Nazis' use of mines as blockade weapons.

Many Volunteer

While the gravity of the situation created by Germany's use of magnetic mines, strewn in the sea lanes by submarines and even by seaplanes, cannot be minimized, it was said today that counter measures were "well in hand." Appeals for volunteers to man 200 drifts and trawlers for mine sweeping operations received quick response and more than the required number is now available.

Two hundred ships and 2,000 men, it was said, soon will join the service of the "trawler reserve." These men, between the ages of 18 and 45, in peacetime earn their living as fishermen. In the last war when the unrestricted submarine mine warfare reached the point where Great Britain's continuity of supplies was threatened, the number of vessels in auxiliary patrol was increased from 745 at the end of 1914 to 3,714 at the time the armistice was signed, and the personnel jumped from 9,985 officers and men to 47,819.

The fleet they manned consisted of yachts, trawlers, motor launches, motorboats, drifters and even paddle boats converted from pleasure boats to mine sweepers.

So it was in the last war and so it will be now, when once more Germany is threatening Britannia's mastery of the seas.

British naval authorities said the blockade, including German exports as well as imports, would be more effective than in the World War because the Reich now is in need of cash and credits.

Paris Takes Same Action

Paris, Nov. 27 (AP).—The official journal tomorrow will publish a decree paving the way for the French part of the Allies' blockade of German exports but the date it becomes effective was not given.

Georges Pernot, minister of blockade, who announced the forthcoming decree, said that "if this results in hindrance for neutral countries it would appear a very weak contribution to the defense of the liberty of the world for which the Allies each day make such heavy sacrifices in human lives and material resources.

"Entire liberty of circulation will subsist for merchandise truly 'neutral,'" he said, recommending that shippers facilitate the Allies' control by delivering certificates of origin before loading boats.

German mines he termed "illegal and inhuman," and giving the Allies the "incontestable right" to inaugurate the embargo.

"An interval is given to avoid putting this new regime into abrupt application," the decree announced.

"Markets conquered by German economy—most often by methods restricting the play of free exchange such as dumping and arbitrary exchanges—will be returned to neutral and allied countries, thus developing their exports."

Shippers were advised to halt their boats at the French control bases at Dunkerque, Le Havre, Marseille, Oran; or the British bases at Kirkwall, The Downs, Weymouth, Malta, Haifa, Port Said and Gibraltar.

Neutrals were given the right to appeal to a tribunal named "Control Committee of Contraband and Enemy Exports," or a higher court, "Council of Prizes," but they must establish the cargo in question became neutral property before November 28.

Berlin Warns Neutrals

Berlin, Nov. 27 (U.P.).—The Nazi press tonight boasted that Britain's sea power has been crushed and warned neutrals of possible "consequences" if they submit to the Allied blockade of German exports.

Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung suggested editorially that neutral nations "would do well to think over the consequences" of submitting.

"The neutrals have to consider whether they are going to tolerate this mistreatment," the newspaper said. "They no longer are the helpless little band of 1914 which marched behind Britain's drum."

Nachtausgabe warned darkly of possible "intervention" by Japan and Italy if Britain insists on enforcing the export blockade.

Carolina Election Taken to Court

Charleston, S. C., Nov. 26 (AP).—Recent election of Mrs. Clara G. McMillan as first district representative was under protest here today on the ground secrecy of the ballot was violated.

James F. Welch, co-founder of the Economic Liberators group seeking a national share-the-wealth plan, said Chief Justice John G. Stabler of the State Supreme Court had issued a writ of certiorari and a hearing would be held at Columbia December 11.

Lord Lothian, Sen. Hughes in Traffic Fixes

Several Notables Among 34 Warned, 13 Canceled Cases

The British Ambassador, Lord Lothian, a Senator and a Representative were among 34 persons who received warnings and 13 who were given cancellations of traffic tickets in the District during the last week, Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown announced yesterday.

Senator Hughes, of Delaware, was let off with a warning, "at the request of Senator Hughes," after he had parked in a "No Parking at Any Time" space. Representative Woodruff, of Michigan, also was issued a warning for stopping in an area which he stated had conflicting signs.

Diplomatic immunity resulted in cancellation of Lord Lothian's ticket for parking in front of the Christian Science Church during evening services and disobeying official sign marked "No Parking." The same immunity also gained cancellations for Sango Takahasi, of the Japanese Embassy; Marian Borowski, 1733 Q street northwest, and Helena Nielbock, of the German Embassy.

"Detained on official business" was the plea of Arno B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service and executive officer of the Alley Dwelling Authority and National Capital Park and Planning Commission. He was given a warning, as was Brig. Gen. Hamilton S. Hawkins, retired.

A clergyman who had taken a member of his church to the hospital on an emergency call, three doctors and a dentist on an emergency call, were given warnings. No warnings or cancellations were granted in Precincts 6, 7, 11 and 12. Also receiving warnings were Frederick A. Palmer, Erber E. Moubayel, Francis J. Aluisi, Dr. William H. Clements, Orpheus W. Tolson, Roscoe Jackson, Dr. Herman A. Robbins, Mitton Andy, Doris L. Bishop, Jane Krauskoph, James C. Wheate, jr., Jack Beckelman, Vernon Vanlandingham, of Arlington, Va.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Washington Chamber Music Society presents the Pro Musica Quartet (Milton Schwartz, Jeno Sevely, Ralph Hersh and William Brennand) Monday afternoon in Phillips Memorial Gallery.

Members of the Washington Chamber Music Society and their guests assembled yesterday afternoon in Phillips Memorial Gallery for the second candlelight concert of the season. Milton Schwartz and his colleagues of the Pro Musica Quartet were the musicians who allied with enjoyable playing the hour during which day turns to evening. Auditors occupied to its capacity the dimly lit room conducive to the appreciation of compositions designed for just that kind of intimate hearing.

The program consisted of two works of the sharpest contrast: Beethoven's A major quartet from Opus 18 and the Ravel quartet. At the opposite poles in technical structure, these quartets also differ in their very essence. They almost speak different languages and they convey ideas from two antithetical worlds. Roughly speaking, they represent the antagonism between faith and scepticism.

The Beethoven work comes from the springtide of the romantic movement, that fertile period when the arts of music and literature expressed boundless confidence in human perfectability. Democracy was dawning and the way seemed clear to the ideal of brotherhood. Ravel's music, on the other hand, voices the cynicism of disillusionment and there is a mocking bitterness in its beauty.

Howard University School of Music presents the Russian Trio (Nina Mesirov Minchin, Herman Felber and Ennio Bolognini) Monday evening in Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel. Program: Trio in C minor, Op. 1, No. 3 (Beethoven), Trio in C minor, Op. 101 (Brahms), Trio in B minor, Op. 32 (Arenski).

Beginning its seventh season of subscription concerts, Howard University School of Music brought back last evening three artists who have appeared before in the campus chapel to the satisfaction of the patrons. Nina Mesirov Minchin, Herman Felber and Ennio Bolognini, who are known collectively as the Russian Trio, are excellent ensemble players skilled in synchrony and in balance of tone, and their interpretative consentience is notable.

Their program began with the C minor trio, which stands officially as Beethoven's Opus 1, although he had written quite a bit of music before that. For all its liveliness and Haydnesque grace, it sounds rather thin, and one listens in vain for any hint of the coming greatness of the composer. In the theme of the second movement one sees foreshadowed the lyric idiom of Beethoven, but the expression lacks positiveness.

With the C minor trio of Brahms the players entered a more rewarding field. The richness of this music is almost excessive for three instruments, for Brahms was always lavish with his harmonic materials. Its impassioned poetry strains at the limitations of the form, yet never distorts the outlines. In content and in utterance it is one of Brahms' most characteristic works, full-blooded and robust.

Anion Arenski's D minor trio, which has not been heard here for some time, was the last offering of the musicians. This music is gracefully written for all the instruments and contains many memorable passages, particularly the elegiac third movement, which has a moving poignancy. Arenski's gift for melody is his most attractive trait, and it alone should lead to a revival of more of his compositions.

McReynolds' Car Hits Abutment; Justice Unhurt

Associate Justice James C. McReynolds, of the United States Supreme Court, escaped unscathed yesterday when his automobile crashed into a bridge abutment in Oxon Hill, Md., and bounced 30 feet into a District marsh.

The accident occurred as the 77-year-old jurist and his handyman, Harry Parker, 62, colored, were returning from a duck hunting trip in Maryland. The car smashed into the bridge abutment at Oxon Run as it rounded a bend in Livingstone road, rebounded across the road, toppled two marker poles, and plunged into a marsh at the intersection of Livingstone road and Southern avenue southeast.

The justice climbed calmly out of the car, helped Parker remove shooting gear and five ducks he had bagged, and philosophically remarked:

"Oh, well, at least there were no bones broken."

which they concentrated today concerned the Treasury and Justice Departments and the Panama Canal.

By flying from Washington to Warm Springs and back to get some essential Presidential decisions, Smith said he would be able to prevent a week's inactivity by a House appropriations sub-committee which is getting the Treasury appropriation bill ready for the next Congress.

After their conference at the temporary White House on a Georgia mountainside, the President drove Smith to the headquarters of the Warm Springs Foundation for Infantile Paralysis Sufferers and chatted with the officers who flew Smith down in an Army bomber.

"How are you going to get out of that field without any wind?" Mr. Roosevelt asked.

The fliers said they believed they could make it all right, though the terrain was rough.

Dime Gems Shine in Met's 'Horseshoe'

But 'Carriage Trade' Is Late as Usual for Season's 'First Night'

By John Selby.
Associated Press Arts Editor.

New York, Nov. 27.—More than 4,000 persons filled the gaudy old Metropolitan Opera house tonight for the musical "first night" which in half a century has not failed to be the brightest social event of the calendar.

The season's opener was "Simon Boccanegra," which is not Verdi's masterpiece by quite a bit. But the tail-coated, ermined and bejewelled carriage trade was there as usual—and late as usual.

The ancient "Met" isn't quite the same, though. The patrician boxholding contingent is trying to get out from under by selling their interests in the building to the operating company. And the old, original patrons might have thought some things a little odd had they come back tonight.

For the jewelry of the woman was not what it once was. Thanks to the vogue of costume jewelry the promenading thousands in the intermissions shone and sparkled even more than of old. A glittering necklace from a department store, is, under the great lights, about as effective as a quarter-million-dollar number from Tiffany's—and can be worn without a bodyguard.

Missing, too, from this opening was Artur Bodanzky, the great conductor of the German repertoire who died last Thursday. In his place was Erich Leinsdorf.

The role of Simon was taken by Laurence Tibbett, beginning his sixteenth season with the Metropolitan, ranked as a "veteran" only by Giovanni Martinelli.

Martinelli opened his twenty-sixth season in the role of the young lover of Simon's daughter.

The gowns of the opera's most eminent patronesses were particularly elaborate.

Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, widow of Speaker Longworth, wore a green gown with a long mink coat; the dowager Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, whom Mrs. Longworth accompanied, made a magnificent entrance after the first act was well under way.

Mrs. Vanderbilt was turned out in a crushed raspberry lame gown with an orchid at the shoulder. At her throat was a brooch of diamonds and emeralds and she wore a headband of crushed raspberry metallic fiber ornamented with emeralds and diamonds. She carried a beige fox fur neckpiece, and had a black fox collar about the neck of her evening wrap.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the Ambassador to Belgium, was accompanied by Mrs. Robert Grosjean and Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings. Her gown was black, set off by purple orchids. She wore a chinchilla wrap with a gray velvet ruff.

Mrs. August Belmont wore a black velvet gown with a single pink rose and a brown fur cape.

Mr. and Mrs. George Chase, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick E. Altemus, Mr. and Mrs. Paul May; Mr. Herman Schultels, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chambers, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Dougherty, Mrs. C. P. Buck, Dr. and Mrs. J. Ernest Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Dermot Nee, Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Maloney, Mrs. Levin T. Handy and Peter Becker, jr.

Mgr. Smyth to Be Honored

More than 2,000 persons, including ranking church and State dignitaries, are expected to pay tribute to Mgr. Thomas Gibbons Smyth, pastor of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, at a banquet at 7 p. m. today at the Mayflower Hotel.

On Thursday the cleric was invested a domestic prelate in the household of Pope Pius XII. Members of the Chevy Chase parish he has served for 28 years will tender the formal dinner and reception.

Principal speaker will be John F. Crosby, law associate of Joseph P. Tumulty, former secretary of President Wilson, who will be a guest of honor. Edmund N. Toland, also an attorney, will be toastmaster.

During Father Smyth's pastorate the Blessed Sacrament Church has expanded from a small wooden structure with a capacity of 100 to the present church and affiliated buildings valued at nearly $1,000,000. There are now 3,000 parishioners.

Among guests at the banquet will be Mgr. Smyth's two brothers, the Rev. James A. Smyth, pastor of the Shrine of the Sacred Heart, and the Rev. John Carter Smyth, of the Paulist Fathers.

With Levin T. Handy as chairman, the committee in charge of the banquet is composed of the following:

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't neglect your kidneys! Use Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

3 MEN... 3 TASTES... 3 REASONS...
Why Calvert Whiskey is America's first choice!
Today open-minded men of all tastes... men who formerly drank rye, bourbon, or Scotch... are turning to Calvert.
For three definite reasons: Calvert, we believe, is smoother... it is milder and more mellow... it tastes better.
Why? Because Calvert is a blended whiskey. Calvert blending begins where distilling ends! And, we believe, whiskey master blended in the Calvert manner is in every respect a finer, more desirable beverage.
Millions of men seem to share our belief. Next time, why not make yours Calvert?
"SCOTCH used to be my drink—then I got a birthday bottle of Calvert. It was marvelous—mellow, and plenty of flavor. Now, it's Calvert and soda for me!"
"BOURBON was my choice—until I tasted Calvert in a highball. Man, it was smooth! You'll find Calvert in my house now."
"RYE was always tops with me. But I'm an open-minded man. So I tried Calvert—and it's been Calvert for me ever since!"

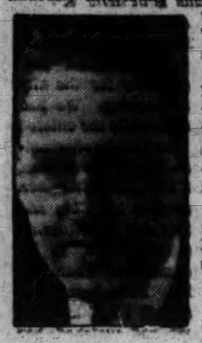
Studio Expert Explains Technicolor's Perfection

Scientific Development Goes Into High; 'March of Time' Analyzes Year's Events; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

WHEN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX production of "Drums Along the Mohawk" comes to the screen at Loew's Palace Theater, following the current engagement of Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland in "Babes in Arms," lovers of action drama not only will see a well-written and closely-knit pageant of Colonial hardihood and heroism that is continuously interesting and exciting, but also will find cause for admiration in the most breath-taking application of Technicolor photography yet brought to the silver sheet.



BELL.

The color treatment of "Drums Along the Mohawk" is by far the most "solid" color job to date. Not only are its outdoor shots spectacles of entrancing beauty, but the indoor scenes, as well, are distinguished by an unexampled sharpness of definition and complete realism.

As hinted here last week, Mr. George R. Giroux, field representative of the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, by a happy coincidence, dropped by the desk shortly after "Drums Along the Mohawk" had been previewed by the drama desks. His outline of the reasons Technicolor is constantly getting better and better was illuminating and just a little too far back in the book—some of the time—for a mind not galled to the dizzying reaches of higher mathematics.

Mr. Giroux had with him a gadget of superimposed film "frames" that made it clear as daylight how and why the three color filters—yellow, red and blue—are put through a triple printing process that results in the present perfection of the Technicolor chromatics. Then came a brief excursion into the mathematical complexities of the operation which were over the head of your reporter like the blue heavens themselves. You can get a vague idea of the accuracy of the procedure when it is divulged that the maximum margin of error in "tracking" the colors is one-thousandth of an inch. That is a pretty far cry from the old two-color process and what Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president of Technicolor, describes as the "days of horses with two tails—one red and one blue."

Furthermore, the actual photography has been tremendously speeded up as a necessary accompaniment of the perfected three-color development. One of the reasons that "Drums Along the Mohawk" is the extraordinary Technicolor exhibit it is, is that it was filmed on negative that is approximately four times as fast as that heretofore used.

The response of the motion picture industry is keeping pace with Technicolor's amazing strides. This year will see 24 Technicolor features on the screens of the country, as against 20 last year, 16 the year before that and 12 the year before that—I have my figures on straight.

The involved matter of the color treatments worked out for each individual picture by the Technicolor staff, under the direction of Natalie Kalmus, is too involved for this typewriter even so much as to tackle with any hope of not getting hopelessly balled up. The aim always, however, is in the direction of realism, rather than impressionism.

Incidentally, a Technicolor camera costs $25,000.

And speaking of "Drums Along the Mohawk," this Claudette Colbert-Henry Fonda costarrer will open at the Palace on Friday of this week. This quite obviously is a craven device to show up those of us who stated so emphatically yesterday that hereafter openings at the Palace would continue to be on Thursday.

I would not be sure that the Civic Theater's first-night audiences do not do it an unintentional injustice. At Sunday night's Washington premiere of "Merrily We Roll Along" at Wardman, there was infinitely more "amateurism" in front of the footlights than behind them. Every new setting was greeted with enormous applause, and important moments more than once were interrupted by impatient and noisy tributes to individual players whose scenes and speeches had not as yet been finished. It was reminiscent of a concert artist's being forced to prolong a brief rest in the course of an intricate concerto. The intentions, of course, were of the best, but their results must have been disconcerting to those intended to be complimented, in the throes of a first night.

Nevertheless, "Merrily We Roll Along" was accorded 12 curtain calls at the end of the last act. It was not until the excitement had abated a bit back stage that Mr. and Mrs. Dan Tuttle happened to remember it also was their twelfth wedding anniversary. If that isn't devotion to your work I don't know what is. Eleven curtains calls and they probably never would have thought of it!

The next issue of the "March of Time," coming along soon to RKO-Keith's screen, will be devoted to "Newsfronts of War—1939." It is said to shed new light on the Stalin-Hitler alliance and trace the major international news developments of the year, showing how they were "covered" by the great press associations that help the Nation's newspapers in their big job of keeping the American people quickly and accurately informed. Readers of The Post, with the greatest world coverage of any paper in the National Capital, should be especially interested in this one.

Bess Davis Schreiner, Washington manager for the Theater Guild and American Theater Society subscription season at the National, drops the comforting line to her clients that tickets for Paul Vincent Carroll's "The White Steed," opening next Monday night, should be in the hands of subscribers today or tomorrow. "The White Steed," by the way, probably will be the last subscription play until after the Christmas holidays. Those who remember the same author's "Shadow and Substance," with Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Julie Haydon, know what to expect.

So the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executives are holding a conclave in Chicago to thresh out final plans for the distribution and national exhibition of David O. Selznick's production of "Gone With the Wind," the $3,000,000-plus, three-hour-and-forty-minute picturization of the Margaret Mitchell novel, starring Clark Gable and Vivien Leigh. With the premiere set for Atlanta, Ga., on December 15, general release probably will be sometime in January, with three performances a day, all seats reserved. Officials at the meeting regard "GWTW" as the third milestone in motion picture history. The first was "The Great Train Robbery" and the second, Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation." We'll find out—eventually.

ONE OF the guests at Hyde Park recently was Louis Segal, president of the Segal Lock and Hardware Co. He met the President and reminded him of a campaign speech at Madison Square Garden seven years ago, in which Roosevelt had stated: "We have the key to the White House in our pocket" . . . The President nodded and said he remembered that speech . . . "If you still have that key," Segal told him—handing him a package—"please accept this pick-proof lock."

THE SMITH Committee investigating the National Labor Relations Board has subpenaed all the books of the National Lawyers Guild, regarding charges of favoritism for Guild members in cases before the board. The subpena is the most comprehensive one ever issued in such cases . . . Herman Shumlin will produce the Jim Thurber-Eliot Nugent play, "The Male Animal." Nugent will appear in it . . . Prosecutor John Rogge, who convicted the Louisiana political leaders, is on his way to Michigan to investigate conditions there . . . Helen Menken has found the play in which she'll return to Broadway. It's by Walter Armitage and has a South African setting.

JOHN KENNEDY, son of Ambassador Kennedy, was at El Morocco recently and discussed his experiences in Scotland—where he had been sent by his father to supervise the victims of the Athenia . . . "It was quite a problem," he reminisced, "and then, out of a clear sky, came a $25,000 gift from Herbert Klotz to help these victims. Yes, wonderful things happened in Scotland" . . . "More wonderful things happen in New York," Marion Carter, El Morocco's publicist, told Kennedy. "Come with me across the room—and meet Herbert Klotz."

AN INSURANCE bill will be introduced at the next session of Congress, getting around the Supreme Court decision which had held that regulation of this business is a matter of State and not Federal concern . . . Louis Bromfield learned that his friend, Jimmy Craddock, will make a pack trip through Arizona next month. Bromfield, now in Hollywood, wired him: "Come out here and make the pack trip up Wilshire Boulevard—and I'll bet nobody notices it" . . . Seymour Felix, the dance director, is returning to Broadway. He'll direct the new show at the Paradise.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY-ELECT William O'Dwyer received front-page publicity when he announced that applicants for jobs as assistant district attorneys must use no political influence and that their applications—duly investigated by the Police Department—will be based upon civil service forms . . . Although gambling is illegal, the boys around O'Dwyer's courthouse will wager that when the new district attorney announces his appointments the list will include Burton Turkus, Louis Drago, N. Kaplan, F. Serry, Silver, Wilson, M. Nias, McGrath, O. Bernstein, E. Levine and Henry Walsh.

IN SIDNEY KINGSLEY'S new play, "The World We Make," Ralph Forster's lines are: "I was doing new work in Vienna . . . great, important, same said . . . perhaps . . . then they came—wanted me to subscribe to their inhumanity. I wouldn't . . . They destroyed my work . . . no matter. They didn't destroy me. I came here, started all over again. We're lucky to be in a country where the human spirit is free" . . . In Forster's case, that's autobiographic. In Vienna and Berlin he starred with Elisabeth Bergner. He could have remained there, after Anschluss, if he had been willing to subscribe to Nazi principles. But he came here—and this is his first role on the American stage.

TWO OF THE leading investment bankers in Great Britain just arrived in Washington to arrange a program for the liquidation of British-owned securities in this country . . . "I have not replaced Miss Gamparelli as premiere danseuse at the Metropolitan Opera," writes Ruthanna Boris, "I am glad to be in the same company with her. I am a soloist. We will both dance there in our respective capacities" . . . The elated producers of "Life With Father" received an order for two tickets for February, 1942. They're obliging the applicants by having two tickets printed especially for the optimistic customers . . . John Steinbeck's new play won't be called "There's One in Every Family." That title is Myron Fagan's.

Boothe Satire Still Remains Top Comedy

'Kiss Boys Goodbye' Repeats Initial Hit At the National

By Nelson B. Bell

THE CAST

Loyd Lolyd	Lee Lindsay
Conductor	Ernest Woodward
Cindy Lou Bethany	Lucia Lull
George	Morris McHenry
Maimie	Ollie Burgoyne
Madison Breed	Loring Smith
R. P. Wickfield	Edwin Nicander
Leslie Rand	Carmel White
Horace Rand	Philip Ober
Myra Stanhope	Yukona Cameron
Oscar	Basil Ruysdael

"Kiss the Boys Goodbye," the Clare Boothe comedy that leaped into instant favor as last season's opening attraction at the National Theater, returned to the stage of its birth last night and repeated its initial triumph. Several of the original cast continue in the roles they created. More than one of the others have been recruited from the Chicago company and the newcomers to their parts have been so judiciously chosen as to preserve the full measure of the play's sharp-edged satire, raciness, brittle wit and swift tempo. The effect last evening was as if the piece never had been seen here before.

This second of the three successive Boothe comedy hits has been variously catalogued as a travesty on the selection of the feminine star to appear in the role of Scarlett O'Hara, in Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind"; a subtle anti-Fascist charade and a blistering attack on so-called "cafe society." However it may be classified, it remains an enlivening experience in the theater that has lost none of its zest even if, since its first appearance, the role of Scarlett has been assigned and the picture, inspirationally nicknamed "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" by Miss Boothe, is about to be released. The mildly acidulous travesty on one of the cinema's major predicaments still is a fruitful source of pungent comedy and a severe test of its actors' skill.

Lucia Lull Perfect Choice

Lucia Lull, who now appears in the role of Cindy Lou Bethany, gave rather more than a hint at Olney last summer that no fear need be entertained that one of the most loquacious parts every written into three acts and six scenes would suffer by the transference of Helen Claire's talents to other fields. As the daughter of the Deep South, trapped into a vicious week-end house party on Long Island and a joust with a fading screen star, a "liberal" columnist, a "sophisticated" writing man and his wife, a publisher of "smart" magazines, a film producer, a gold-plated playboy, a press agent-director and divers and sundry others, for the coveted role, Miss Lull plays the part as if she had been born to it, with a Dixie accent as quaintly mellow as it is authentic. In every quality of fragility, ingenuousness and charm—not to mention her Culpeper temper—she fulfills to the utmost every exacting requirement of a role that represents one of comedy's most arduous tasks.

As her arch-rival, Myra Stanhope, the "bombshell from Brooklyn"—and a great many of the screen's most effulgent "vamp" girls have hailed from Brooklyn — Yukona Cameron appears for the first time on a local stage as a comedienne of the first rank. Miss Cameron succeeds Benay Venuta as one of the most amusing and most colorful figures in the play and causes those who have admired her in other capacities to wonder why she has not earlier perceived where her real forte lies. It is Myra who speaks many of the zippiest lines in the script and Miss Cameron permits none of them to lose a featherweight of its punch. Furthermore, to a part that needs a stunning presence, Lady Yukona brings a stunning presence.

Veterans Score Again

Edwin Nicander, as Wickfield, the publisher, and Philip Ober Rand, the writer of slightly smudged jokes, are among those who lent their talents to the comedy's premiere on E street some 14 months ago. They play with perfected finesse. Another of the original cast is Carmel White, Mrs. Rand, whose study of an harassed and modestly outraged hostess remains one of the delightful assets of a provocative and irresistible lampooning of many fashionable foibles. As the radical columnist, Madison Bread, Loring Smith succeeds John Alexander, who assumed the role here last year and, like all of the others, holds his part to its high place in the working out of the destiny of a wisp of a girl endowed with a surprising capacity for taking care of herself. As the oily producer, whose intentions toward innocent young womanhood are not always strictly professional, Henry Norell achieves the same sort of questionable distinction the role enjoyed at the earlier hands of Sheldon Leonard and Lex Lindsay, also seen at Olney last summer, moves up from the part of Oscar, the reporter, to that of Lloyd, the director, in such fine fashion as largely to erase memories of Millard Mitchell, its originator.

Ollie Burgoyne still makes Mamie, the colored cook in the Rand household, a source of belligerent comedy, assisted by Martin McKenny, as the Shakespearean butler, vice Frank Wilson.

At this week's popular prices, "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" is a splendid "refill" for those who wish to enjoy its laughter again and an enormous bargain for those encountering it for the first time.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 27.—Paramount reserved a seat on every plane flying west Sunday, so if at the last minute Mary Martin could leave her show "Goin' Places" she could get to Hollywood for the preview of "The Great Victor Herbert" last night. Paramount isn't waiting until after the preview to announce the next Mary Martin picture will be "Miami," an ultra modern and sophisticated musical, in contrast to the old-fashioned "Victor Herbert."

LOUELLA PARSONS

It was Mary herself who requested the modern setting. She made her big hit singing "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" on Broadway and she's anxious to get back to the modern mood. Interesting that the idea for "Miami" is based on a song Bill Le Baron (who will produce) wrote several years ago titled "Miami Share." The new yarn will be directed by Andrew Stone, who also megaphoned Mae Martin debut with Allan Jones in "Victor Herbert."

The Fannie Hurst-Warner Brothers dispute over whether the Hurst studio had the right to serialize the family she created in "Sister Act" for a whole series of their "Four Daughter" pictures, is due to be settled any minute. In the meantime, Warners are readying the fourth yarn about the Lemp family to be called "Four Mothers." This will probably go on into "Four Divorcees" or "Four Grandmothers" before they're finished, for the "Daughters" are to be an annual Warner event. Every member of the cast, including the Lane sisters, Gale Page, Jeffrey Lynn, Claude Rains, May Robson and others are signing separate and individual contracts agreeing to report every year for their respective parts on 60 days' notice.

Charles Boyer and Pat Paterson trained into Los Angeles Sunday afternoon where they met Tyrone Power, Annabella and a whole raft of reporters. After Charles explained that he had been released from the French army and that he had no intention of making propaganda films, the four made a dash for Ty's car. It isn't yet decided which picture Boyer will make first. "It's a Date," however, is off at Universal with Charles scheduled to make some other picture with Deanna Durbin sometime in March. This leaves an Irene Dunne picture, at "U," "The Man on Half Moon Street," at Paramount, and a Ginger Rogers film, at RKO, from which to choose. Ty and Annabella invited the Boyers to be their house guests until their home, now rented, is available.

Snapshots of Hollywood and Philadelphia collected at random: What a royal welcome in Philadelphia! The fans swarmed the theater to see the Hollywood movie stars and Ronald Reagan gets more fan mail than Clark Gable at his best; Harry Richman, playing at the Walton Roof to huge crowds, introduced our little crowd; George Lamaze is now head of the Warwick and if we don't all put on pounds it won't be his fault, what with midnight lunches sent to our rooms and hampers for the theater. Carl, the chef, personally served us eggs Lamaze, a concoction of eggs, tomatoes, chicken, tongue and mushrooms; the whole town is football mad. Two of the boys, Jim Connell, of the University of Pennsylvania, formerly worked for Lamaze, while John Bohrman, fullback of Cornell, is also a Lamaze graduate.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Nov. 27.

Some day, if M-G-M is in the mood for a great story, I'd like to see them take a look see in their own backyard and then start filming the story of an Irishman named Sheehan.

HOPPER

They'd have a newspaperman character who renounced his profession to enter one with greater circulation — the picture industry. They'd dramatize the story of how he fought intrigue and overrode opposition to make Fox Movietone the most talked-about talky-tone in the field. They'd show Winnie broadening the scope of the business by establishing the first foreign sales organization ever heard of. They'd bring a tear to the eye when they pictured the scrappy Celt coming to Hollywood green and stepping in charge of Fox production—drawing jeers and jibes when he was foolish enough to buy "Seventh Heaven" and "What Price Glory?" only to make history with those two stories.

They'd inspire respect in the man's judgment and daring when they showed how he nursed five unknowns and braved the lack of "box-office" navies for these two pictures by zooming Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Victor McLaglen, Dolores del Rio and Edmund Lowe to the heights of stardom. And there's a Cavalcade of Cavalcades in the episode back in 1923 when Sheehan, learned by the bankers that he could shelve a $150,000 purchase of a story made by his predecessor, chose to go through with the screening of that story. And then proceeded to make it into a huge profit reaping film that won the Academy Award and is still being shown where reruns are by request—"Cavalcade."

I'm sorry if some of my friends misconstrued an item I had in a recent column, in which I referred to our girls who are learning every phase of the Red Cross service. What I wrote was: "It isn't a good sign when we feel we must prepare ourselves for America's entrance into a war we don't belong in. Let's spend our time fighting against it, instead of preparing for it." This has been misconstrued as a condemnation by me of the Red Cross. No one could be so unintelligent as to criticize the Red Cross, an organization I worked with very closely during the last war and which works during war and peace for all countries, without thought of race, color or creed. And has for a great many years, and will as long as our civilization lasts. My remark was not against an organization that helps the victims of war—but against war itself!!!

Again Sheehan is braving the gaffaws of contemporaries by casting unknowns in his first Metro picture. Fresh to the screen is Irina Baronova, once the principal dancer of the Ballet Russe and destined to be one of the genuine glamour girls in the land of the talking and moving shadow. Already her beauty and talents are being lauded to the skies and she's on for the part He by Lamaxx was to get in "The Ziegfeld Girl." Opposite Robert Young, as the dashing young horseman, is a leading lady shaked from the ranks of the M. G. M. orchestra—Helen Gilbert. And directing this magnificence, picked by Winnie from a field of the greatest directors in the land, is a young chap whose record includes the direction of many "B" pictures but ended up as another A. "Maisie" is out Christmas Carol. "I picked Edwin L. Marin because he's young, fresh, knows his business and since it's the first real major picture entrusted into his hands I know he'll give it everything he's got," explains Sheehan, "and he's got plenty!"

Kids Stealing Film Spotlight

Kids have stolen the Hollywood spotlight today. There are more kids in the first ranks of stardom and more on the ladder to the stellar heights than ever before.

Sheer silk glamour is being shoved into the discard by down-to-earth "homespun drama," and it's pretty difficult to be homespun without a freckle-faced youngster.

Leading the juvenile parade as the No. 1 box office bet of the cinema shops is, of course, Mickey Rooney, but there are a handful of other juvenile "names" who are not far behind, Shirley Temple, Deanna Durbin, Jane Withers, Jackie Cooper, Freddie Bartholomew and Judy Garland.

Scores of newcomers are being developed.

Producer Charles R. Rogers elevated two youngsters, Joyce Arlech and Donald Brennan to featured parts in his newest production, "Our Neighbors—the Carters," and has signed a fourth newcomer, 19-year-old Gloria Carter, for the romantic lead.

Paramount is introducing a promising young singer, 14-year-old Susanna Foster, soon. "The Great Victor Herbert" marks her debut.

Planning For Parks

Many citizens will probably concur in both Senator Capper's defense of the acquisition of extensive park lands in the District and the criticism of the present policy by the Wagner-Sauers report. The real difficulty seems to be that Congress has not supplied sufficient funds to permit a reasonable application of the plan laid down by the Capper-Cramton act.

Certainly it is desirable to acquire land needed for park purposes before it is developed for private use. As Senator Capper points out, substantial savings may be effected by taking over tracts designated for parks before construction activity on adjacent property raises the price of the desired acreage to prohibitive levels. Careful planning necessarily involves heavy outlays for acquisition of park lands when a city undergoes a period of rapid growth.

Mere approval of advance planning, however, does not dispose of the point raised by Secretary Ickes' expert investigators. Messrs. Wagner and Sauers did not criticize the buying of land for future park development. They pointed out that "land acquisitions under the Capper-Cramton act by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission have outoutstripped the ability of the national Capital parks to protect, maintain, and improve the lands acquired." And they expressed doubt whether the community would or should support a program in which development and maintenance of park lands are declining so that more land may be purchased.

In short, the investigators found that available funds are being used, not to give District residents a maximum of service from the parks, but primarily to buy land for an extensive park system befitting the National Capital. In adopting the policy of advance planning and purchasing Congress should have provided funds for that purpose. To be sure, Federal loans were granted, but the District was required to repay them at such a rapid rate that park maintenance has declined.

The purchase of large areas of land for future use usually implies some means of spreading the cost over a period of years. When the District is kept very near to a "pay-as-you-go" basis, and is also compelled to purchase land for future embellishment of the National Capital, current requirements must necessarily be neglected. The real need seems to be a more equitable financial arrangement that would permit advance land purchases to go forward without jeopardizing essential community service.

Rumania Stands Firm

Because of the Allied blockade, which has effectively cut her off from overseas sources of essential raw materials and foodstuffs, Germany has been putting pressure on her neutral neighbors to increase their exports to the Third Reich.

In Rumania's case this pressure has been particularly insistent. Rumania is rich in agricultural products which Germany needs to supplement her domestic output. Rumania is also the only nation in Europe, outside of Russia, which produces petroleum in any sizable quantities. And Germany is especially in need of that commodity. Should her supplies of oil be exhausted her air force would be grounded, her mechanized armies stalled and her submarines forced to remain in harbor.

A considerable percentage of Rumania's petroleum and her agricultural surpluses already go to the Reich. But Germany has been urging the Bucharest government to increase such exports. Taking its courage in its hands, the Balkan government has resisted these German demands on the ground that Rumania must conserve her resources for possible war use. Premier Argetoianu, who was believed to favor giving in to the Reich, has been forced out and a new cabinet, headed by George Tatarescu, a statesman believed to entertain pro-French leanings, has been formed.

Too much must not be made of this change of government at Bucharest. Because of her peculiarly exposed position as a neighbor of Russia, Hungary and Bulgaria, all of whom have claims on her territory, Rumania's freedom of action would be distinctly limited in any circumstances. King Carol is apparently determined, however, to preserve a status of independence, which would be imperiled by permitting the nation to become the economic satrapy of the Third Reich.

The Russian Bully

For more than seven weeks the Kremlin has sought through a combination of cajolery, bluster and outright intimidation to force Finland to make far-reaching territorial and other concessions to the Soviet union.

These tactics have so far failed to produce the intended result. The Finns are fully aware of the tremendous disparity in size, population, economic and military power between their nation and its gigantic neighbor. For that reason they have been prepared to make concessions to Moscow. Regardless of possible consequences, however, they have courageously refused to consider those Russian demands whose fulfillment would impair or destroy Finnish neutrality and independence.

During these seven weeks the Soviet government has refrained from overt acts against the little Scandinavian democracy. There are reasons to believe that Moscow has been counting on pressure tactics to produce such an intolerable financial, economic and psychological strain on Finland as ultimately to destroy the Finnish will to resist.

It is not yet certain that Russia now plans to move from the orbit of threat to that of action. There is no doubt, however, that she has begun enormously to increase the pressure on her little neighbor. There is a distinctly ominous overtone in the crescendo of violent threats made by the Communist press against Finland. They are all too reminiscent of the Nazi press campaigns which preceded Hitler's conquests of Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland.

In the realm of diplomacy the Moscow government has, however, struck a slightly more moderate note. Referring to the incident on the Karelian border where, according to unverified Soviet reports, some Russian soldiers were killed in a frontier skirmish begun by Finnish troops, the Russian note to Finland declares that it is "not inclined to magnify" the incident. Nor are the demands made by Moscow on the Helsinki government actually couched in the form of an ultimatum. The note merely "proposes" that as a means of avoiding future incidents of that kind, Finland withdraw her troops some miles from the border in the Karelian isthmus.

The Helsinki government has denied responsibility for the Miinala incident. It has also refused to consider the withdrawal of any border guards unless Russia does likewise. And in view of the fact that unilateral withdrawal by Finland would expose her line of fortifications from Lake Ladoga and the Gulf of Finland to instant seizure by Russia, this attitude is entirely understandable. Even with a million Russian soldiers massed on her frontier, and even with the Soviet press asserting that Russia "will repeat the lesson given to Polish landlords," the Finns are standing firm.

They can be under no illusion as to what a Russian invasion of their country would mean. But the Finns are not prepared to let their hard-won independence go by default, even if its preservation means war against seemingly hopeless odds.

Still A Dilemma

Considering the heavy losses of ships and lives in the waters surrounding Great Britain, the United States may well congratulate itself on the exclusion of American vessels from this combat area. A heavy toll of neutral as well as belligerent shipping is being taken. Floating mines make no distinction between enemy men o' war and harmless vessels flying neutral flags. For the present it appears that ships are safe only so long as they remain outside of these dangerous waters.

But demands for the restoration of idle ships to sea lanes entering the combat area continue to be made. Spokesmen for both the ship operators and maritime labor argued in a radio debate on Sunday night for the transfer of American ships to the registry of some neutral European country. Germany's ruthless mine warfare makes that proposed solution much less attractive than it otherwise might be. Nevertheless, it will doubtless be pressed until some other plan of rescuing idle seamen and ships from their present plight is worked out.

A new note has been introduced into the shipping controversy by Acting Secretary of the Navy Edison. "The status of our naval auxiliaries," he writes in his annual report, "is still very unsatisfactory . . . The creation of a merchant marine of modern, fast, and efficiently manned vessels is a measure of great importance to national security as an auxiliary, war reserve of vessels not needed for use in peacetime, but urgently and promptly required in war."

It is well to remember that one of the chief reasons why Congress has subsidized the American merchant marine is to develop a modern fleet that can be used as a naval auxiliary in case of need. That purpose could scarcely be served by transferring American ships to foreign registry. Nor can it be served by letting ships deteriorate in disuse. The unavoidable fact is that the predicament in which Congress has left the American merchant fleet seriously detracts from its usefulness in national defense.

At a time when the United States is spending hundreds of millions of dollars to augment its naval strength any weakening of the supporting merchant fleet seems inexcusable. The problem is not, therefore, simply one of finding new employment for American seamen and ships. It must also be dealt with from the viewpoint of national defense. Congress will doubtless find that under the neutrality act it is no easy task to reconcile these diverse interests. Yet it is now clear that the issue cannot be properly settled outside of Congress. The way in which that body meets the dilemma it has created will be one of its most severe tests in the 1940 session.

Looking Beyond Victory

Man does not live by bread alone nor even by military triumphs.

Great Britain and France went to war against Germany because Hitler's repeated and uncontested aggressions had created an intolerable situation which they were determined not to see perpetuated. And, as Premier Chamberlain pointed out in his broadcast to the empire last Sunday, the Allies intend to continue the war until they have "put a stop to this policy of domination which has so long disturbed the peace of Europe."

But while the immediate task for the British and French is to win the war, large numbers in both countries and uncounted multitudes in neutral lands are looking beyond victory to the peace that will follow. They want some assurance that the tremendous sacrifices being made today will have a constructive and not merely a negative result. They want the world that will emerge when the bloodletting and destruction cease to be a better, safer, happier world than that which led up to the present catastrophe.

It would be difficult and might be dangerous for Allied leaders at this stage of the war to formulate precise peace terms. Yet they cannot ignore the profound wishes in the hearts of their peoples for a better ordered system in Europe.

To this earnest desire Premier Chamberlain also addressed himself. With broad strokes of the brush, he painted a hopeful picture of what he believes would be the consequences of an Allied victory. The Allies, he said, have no thought "of tearing up all the old frontier posts and redrawing the map according to the ideas of the victors." What they have in mind is "a Europe with a new spirit in which the nations . . . will approach their difficulties with goodwill and mutual tolerance."

Mr. Chamberlain visualizes a Europe in which adjustments between nations will be made in a peaceful and amicable spirit free of threat, in which the barriers to trade would be reduced to a minimum, in which armaments would be cut down and every nation would have the right to its own form of government so long as "that government did not pursue an external policy injurious to its neighbors."

Although the details of Mr. Chamberlain's plan for a new Europe are somewhat vague, the implications are clear. The British premier is suggesting the indispensability of a new international organization, of machinery "capable of conducting and guiding the development of the new Europe in the right direction." And in this organization a Germany "animated by a new spirit" would be invited to play her rightful part.

Many will dismiss the picture drawn by Mr. Chamberlain as a collection of glittering generalities, an invocation to the unattainable. To do so, however, would be to underestimate the tremendous sentiment which exists in Allied countries and among free nations everywhere for that better-ordered world which, he proclaims, is the basic aim of the Allies.

In many instances, listening to the average person talk causes you to wonder what he's thinking about.

It is advisable to be extremely careful in dealing with a man who talks a lot or a woman who has little to say.

Northern Cooking

From the Birmingham News

Dixie visitors in the North are pleased at the honors paid the South in restaurants and hotel dining rooms. It is an asset to advertise Southern cooking. "Southern biscuits" are a treat, a picture of an old mammy tickles the palate, and Southern-tsyle fried chicken draws patrons.

Down here in the South, however, one seldom hears about Northern cooking, even though the presence of many Northern tourists down this way would seem to justify catering to sectional palates. One never, or seldom, sees signs of "Northern-style cooking" or notice of special Northern dishes.

There may be several reasons for this. Aside from New England boiled dinners and a few things like that, there are no distinctive Northern foods. Northern foods are rather more cosmopolitan, undistinguished by those qualities which are the result of long-continued development in comparatively isolated communities.

Furthermore, it may be that those who dwell north of the Mason and Dixon line do not go in for those more leisurely graces of life around the dining table. Food there does not occupy the place in song and story it does in the South.

It is possible, too, that Southern prejudice and feeling has much to do with keeping out references in the South to "Northern cooking."

Supreme Court Geography

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The population center of the United States is now almost at the Indiana-Illinois line, yet every member of the Federal Supreme Court comes from east of that line. Three come from New York; and of the eight living members only three come from the South. Nevertheless, according to the present propaganda, a rule is being urged that geographical considerations should be forgotten.

The lawyers who live on the Atlantic Coast have a tremendous advantage in that they are near the scene of action. They are talked about because the East knows them.

Not a member of the Court comes from west of the Mississippi; yet the midline of the land is in Nebraska.

All that ignoring geographical considerations means is that the East should control the Court. Let any Western man be named, and at once the cry goes up, "We don't know him."

The first requirement should be whether or not the proposed new member has already mastered constitutional law. The notion that a new member can learn the law is an absurdity.

The second requirement should be that the man has already had training in courts of record as a judge or at least as a highly competent practitioner before the courts of record. The Court has already suffered too much from the presence of members who do not know the technique of the judge.

The third requirement should be that the Court is representative of all the people, of all the land. The High Plains, the Southwest, the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast regions have just claims upon special consideration at this time.

Unless the Supreme Court does become truly representative and highly competent, the movement to make it elective with definite terms set will increase in force and rapidity.

Those who urge that geography should not be considered may find themselves embarrassed to elect all Senators at large without reference to States. They are Eastern Nationalists, not Federalists. And the Western Senators who argue that geography is of no importance will have their attention called by their constituents to the fact that long residence in Washington has alienated them from the interests of their own people. These two notions may collide.

WILLIAM E. CHANCELLOR.

On Driving Manners

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The truck controversy really resolves itself into this: Three or 4 per cent of truck drivers on the road give the whole clan a bad name. They have no consideration for anyone; they regard themselves as the royally anointed and the pedestrian as a species of vermin. Its their job to annihilate him if possible; failing this, to throw a scare into him that he won't forget.

Of course in town the proportion of such drivers (light delivery trucks especially) is higher, as all city suffers know.

Among "pleasure" car drivers I'd say the percentage of impossibles is 15 per cent, including the light crashers, the pedestrian chargers, corner skimmers, cutters-in, aisle changers, horn torturers and natural born pests. No improvement will take place until the number of cars in use declines—there are several ways this could be done. With half the traffic we'd double the worst witnessed in Europe and still be painfully aware of living in the motor age.

The truck drivers seem to win the present argument.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your editorial of November 23, entitled "Reorganization Strategy," is a step in the right direction from the position heretofore taken by you relative to local suffrage, but does not go far enough.

You protest the inefficiency of the present method of local government, whereby Congress acts as a city council for this municipality of 627,000 inhabitants. You also admit that "a large number of Washington citizens" favor the popular election of a city council to perform those legislative functions which are properly included in the powers of all city governments.

You understand (strangely enough some people still do not) that there is no legal impediment to the delegation by the Congress of municipal legislative powers to a local city government, such powers as a State customarily delegates to the governments of the cities within its borders, and that the provision in the Constitution vesting "exclusive legislative jurisdiction" over the District of Columbia in the Congress of the United States means only that Congress shall exercise the same powers over the District as are exercised by any State over the cities within its jurisdiction. So far you are on safe grounds.

However, why stop there? Why adopt the defeatist attitude that it is impossible to persuade the Congress to approve a plan of government, for the District of Columbia which includes a popularly elected city council or governing body? Why not go along with the 90 per cent of the Washington citizens who favor local self-government?

After all, the members of Congress are themselves elected by the people, and come from self-governing communities. They would be the first to resent any attempt of a State to usurp the powers now held by their local governments, be they city, town or county. If the matter is properly explained to them, they will understand the anomaly of such a dictatorship as exists in the Capital City, and if, understanding the situation, they fail to respond to a united appeal by Washingtonians for self-government, their Americanism should be seriously questioned.

The suggestion, with which you apparently agree, that there be substituted for a popularly elected city council an appointed body with legislative powers, is a dangerous one, be that body composed entirely of local citizens or the present Board of Commissioners. The delegation of legislative powers, the making of laws, the levying of taxes, the disbursement of tax money, to appointed officials is the negation of the American system of government. Nothing more surely operates to suppress the liberties of a free people than the exercise of such powers by individuals not responsible to the people themselves.

Hence, unless the Congress is willing to delegate these powers to a body elected by the citizens of Washington, it will be better to continue the present inefficient method of government of this municipality by Congress.

Let the plan of reorganization of the administrative functions of the District government be whatever is considered best by experts in municipal government. Let the administrative head or heads of the District government be a mayor, city manager, or a board of commissioners. But do not support, or even given countenance to any such un-American plan as would confer upon appointed officials the legislative rights which properly belong to the people, themselves.

Not Our Purview

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In a letter which appeared in The Post of November 21 T. H. Russell asked whether, in view of the strong opposition to the placing of the Jefferson Memorial, it was not ironical for President Roosevelt to state that:

"We believe that the average opinion of mankind is in the long run superior to the dictates of the self-chosen."

In reply to your correspondent's query, may I say that perhaps the President does not regard the "united and indignant protests of the voteless residents of the District" as voicing "the average opinion of mankind or even that of the people of the rest of the country whose chosen representatives in Congress authorized, by permission or acquiescense at least, the emplacement of the memorial on its present site and who could have prevented such a consummation had they so desired.

I am one of the numerous tribe of "voteless residents of the District" and was opposed to the building of the memorial on the spot finally selected. But I do not believe for an instant, as so many of the clan apparently do, that our views on questions of national, as distinguished from local or municipal import, within the District of Columbia, should be regarded by the powers that be as controlling or indeed as entitled to any more consideration than that given the opinions of a like number of citizens resident elsewhere who are interested in the development of their National Capital.

Such questions are wholly and properly within the purview of the Federal Government and, in my view will always be settled as national matters by Congress and the Executive in the customary manner without regard to whether we Washingtonians are voteless or otherwise.

The Capital Parks Report

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The report on the National Capital Parks is being read today with closest attention and interest by thousands of Washingtonians who have deplored and resented the steady decline of our beautiful public gardens since they were taken out of control of the War Department and their present administration was set up.

The investigators state what is all too apparent to the most casual observer, that "park trees and shrubbery are in a woeful state, as if appropriations were inadequate or skilled horticulturists were not on the job."

To fix responsibility for this condition is difficult in the complex and chaotic set-up of the administration of the parks. However, millions of dollars have been appropriated and spent for so-called "construction" work while penny-pinching has been the order of the day on horticulture and maintenance.

The Wagner and Sauers report, among other findings, recommends that the reorganization of the Parks Offices should have three main divisions, construction, horticulture and maintenance. If this is heeded may future appropriations be adequate and definitely ear-marked horticulture and maintenance. Trees, shrubbery, grass and flowers make a park. Asphalt and cement do not.

Tapping Sticks

Mr. Hogan did more than interest me with his story of the long knives; he set me remembering. In one tick of the clock I had traversed the years to a bright, icy December day and myself alone in our big house that crowned a windswept hill. For it was here I had endured and somehow managed to survive the few minutes hat were ages-long and which constitute the most terrifying experience of my life.

Why I was alone came about through a series of natural events; it was the holiday season and mother had left early for the city and Christmas shopping. We had stood on the porch while she entered the bulbous, pumpkin-hued omnibus which took her to the station, shrieking don't-forgets after her. Later father went to his office and the boys piled in the open touring car and went along too, to be dropped at the millpond where the skating was fine. Even Janny, our Negro cook was off; I had knelt in the windowseat and watched her flap down the drive holding her hat and bending her body against the keen wind that blew up from the river. I was alone until noon.

The pike glistened with hoar frost which made it look like a bit of Christmas tinsel that someone had dropped, and because of the steel edge to the wind it was forsaken of all life. But even as I regretted its deserted state a strange equippage came crawling out of the hills and as the road lay directly beneath me I could see it was a shackled buggy minus its top that it was drawn by a flea of a horse and that it held two men crouched in the seat against the icy winds.

I followed its progress idly because it was the only moving thing in sight until with a surprised start I realized it was turning in at our gate. Once through the stone pillows, the small horse was flayed into a run and the ascent to the house was made in a shower of flying gravel.

I frowned and stood up; I did not like to see a horse forced uphill at a fast pace and I did not want visitors. But the buggy came on and made straight for the hitching post where the men climbed out. Their movements were unwieldy as they hobbled in a queer gait around to the back, and though I had been prepared to open the front door, I ran down the hall to the kitchen in time to see them mounting the back steps.

At their knock I opened the door, spoke politely to them and was about to add that my father could be found at his office, for I assumed it was he they wanted, when I was shoved rudely aside. They lurched in, their shoulders touching, and stood clutching heavy sticks as they peered slyly about.

What riveted my attention was the identical pattern of the pair. They bore the striking sameness of two leaves. Their low, stocky figures shambled forward over the heavy cudgels, elf locks streaked in dingy butter-colored wisps over their low brows. As I watched they slitted their lids and held me with their half-shut eyes and I caught the gleam of their tawny amber color.

"Did you come to see father?" My youthful verve was fast slipping but I tried to maintain a creditable face though I felt a strong desire to bolt. At my question the men bared yellowed teeth, spreading their lips in a grin that held no mirth. They shook dirty, flying locks, leering at me where I had taken root. Their grotesque bodies formed a barrier between me and the door until lurching softly they moved and took a furtive step, their sticks tapping as one. A scrap of courage held me fast when one of them spoke.

"What's your name?" he said, his voice thick as if coated with green mold and the words seemed to squirm before me like the repulsive slugs upturned by a spading-fork. Horror flared in me but I answered with a brightness I was far from feeling. Clutching the sticks they leaned forward and the voice came again: where were the others; was I alone?

"Then you are alone?" Again the wordless glance was passed and grasping their sticks they ran their hands down the wood which had the wavy lines of a T drawn by a child.

"They'll be home for dinner—all of them."

"The clock—they'll be home!" I wrenched my voice back from wherever it had been hiding and flung the words at them. Instantly they paused, their lichen-gray shoulders touching. The wordless glance was exchanged, then turning they shambled out, their awkward bodies scrambling over the ground with the ungainly gait of a crab. I snapped back to life then and running through the house I saw them rattle off. When they reached the gate they drove back to the open country from which they had come and with relieved eyes I saw them fade over the hill.

Later, the family laughed and accused me of daydreams. But when I had burst down the steps with my odd story on their arrival for dinner, father had driven wildly in pursuit. He had overtaken no one. No side roads led from the highway and the flea horse could not have gone far in so short a time; father was emphatic in pointing this out to me. He sifted the evidence until I had not a shred to cling to. The county's meager population was well known to him but none answered to my weird description, much less two! It was an hallucination, he said. But when I think of the shambling figures that lurched and moved toward me, their sticks making one sound as they tapped the floor, I know it was not a dream.

The Fortress Cracks

PLAIN NEWSPAPER reporting made the first break in the fortress of graft and general corruption erected by Tom Pendergast, but it must be allowed that for years the newspapers of Kansas City were either complacent or deceived. Roy Roberts, the editorial boss of the Star, admits that he shared the popular belief that Pendergast was satisfied with the honest graft which he was known to receive from his companies dealing in concrete and concrete pipe, his garbage disposal company, his asphalt and paving interests and his liquor agency.

Moreover, when Henry F. McElroy, a cunning and picturesque little Iowa real estate dealer, became city manager and announced that he would keep his own accounts according to his own homespun, country-store method, he received editorial acclaim. McElroy died suddenly a few weeks ago after he had been indicted in the State courts and just as Maurice Milligan, the Federal district attorney, was on the point of indicting him for evasion of his income taxes.

When he fled from office he took along his primitive informal accounts as personal possessions, but the official books reeked of fraud. The Federal Government is now proceeding against his estate for taxes on unreported income, but he is understood to have divested himself of most of his personal wealth years ago by gifts to members of his family.

Took Advantage Of Gullibility

McELROY, LIKE Pendergast, took advantage of the gullibility of press and public. He was a bossy, officious little man who developed into an act his pose of simple, direct efficiency. He refused to answer questions and for years the city's books were as private as the financial records of the State of Louisiana under Huey Long and his political heirs, until last spring, when, in Louisiana, too, a newspaper editor, James Crown, broke through the gang's defenses with a minute expose of graft.

Less than two years ago, when open gambling and prostitution flourished in Kansas City under police protection, and, in one notorious place, nude waitresses served a "businessmen's" lunch, an important executive of the Journal-Post deprecated the Star's crusade against the ballot frauds on the ground that their importance was exaggerated to the detriment of Kansas City. He didn't know, and, at that time, neither did Roberts, what rottenness existed behind McElroy's front of rugged independence and Pendergast's fake reputation for generosity and kindness.

McElroy pretended that good government and economy were a hobby with him and that he had made his pile and was now indifferent to profit. He let it be understood that he was doing Kansas City a favor and that it would be gross ingratitude to question him on money matters. He would arbitrarily cut the pay of the cops and other city employes for months at a time as a show of ruthless, nonpolitical economy, and the public cheered, not knowing that the rolls, nevertheless, were padded with hundreds of Pendergast's ward and precinct leaders with only nominal duties or none at all.

Further Delousing Is In Prospect

THE ROSTER has been reduced by 1,400 head and about a million dollars a year already and will be further deloused of Pendergast parasites in the near future. The unfortunate honest cops and other actual servants in the city administration had a miserable time, being robbed of earned pay so that McElroy could make a show of balancing a fake budget. The pay they lost in this manner was diverted to the political deadheads on the rolls and to such major robberies as a water leak inspection which cost $5,000 a month for six years, almost all graft.

The political deadheads, in turn, and the legitimate city employes, too, were systematically looted of assessments and contributions for Pendergast's organization and his personal funds. He was betting hundreds of thousands of dollars on the races and much of that money represented privation in the homes of his own henchmen and actual workers in the city's service.

The Journal-Post, under new management, has competed briskly with the Star in the latter and more scandalous phases of the crusade, but journalism snoozed for years while Pendergast and McElroy were operating the most arrogant and ruthless robbery of a city that has been discovered since the revelations of Lincoln Steffens.

Congress Library Will Display Magna Charta

One of the four original manuscripts of Magna Charta, the keystone of all subsequent democratic rights, will be placed in the Library of Congress this afternoon near the American Declaration of Independence and Constitution.

The document that expressed British liberties in 1215 will be handed to Librarian Archibald MacLeish for "safekeeping" by Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador.

The ceremonies at 4 p. m. in the main exhibit hall, second floor, "will be informal," the librarian's office said. The Ambassador will say a few words, and the librarian will respond briefly.

The Communist Collapse

Labor Cleans House Of Party Members And 'Fellow Travelers'

(Following is the second of six articles on communism in America.)

By Benjamin Stolberg.

THE COMMUNIST Party has been the most destructive force in the history of American labor. Yet organized labor has never been Communist.

In the American Federation of Labor the Communists have had very little influence since 1937. Today the American Federation of Teachers is the only national A. F. of L. union still more or less under Communistic influence.

The C. I. O. on the other hand, has been almost completely dominated by the Stalinists and their sympathizers. For they took full advantage of the opportunities offered by a new and rapidly expanding movement to get into its organizational drive, its national office, its organizing committees and the offices of many of its new unions.

IN THE NATIONAL office they were represented by such fellow travelers as Lee Pressman, counsel for the C. I. O.; Len DeCaux, editor of the C. I. O. News and director of publicity, and John Brophy, until recently director of the C. I. O.

In the unions they had such party members or fellow travelers as Harry Bridges, of the West Coast longshoremen; Mervyn Rathbone, of the American Communications Association; Donald Henderson, of the agricultural workers; Ben Gold, of the Fur Workers; Michael Quill, of the Transport Workers; Abram Flaxer, of the State, County and Municipal Workers; Wyndham Mortimer and Richard Frankensteen, of the United Automobile Workers; Joseph Curran, of the National Maritime Union; Eleanor Nelson, of the Federal Workers.

In these unions, in almost every case, the majority or the whole of the executive board follows the party line. Many of the State and local industrial councils also follow the Communist lead. And so the Communist Party, which controlled less than one-third of the dues-paying membership of the C. I. O. has been able to ride the entire movement.

It was riding high until the Hitler-Stalin pact. The pact was a bombshell.

First Casualty Was in A. F. of L.

THE FIRST casualty was in the A. F. of L. The American Federation of Teachers was in national convention when the trade pact was announced. Dr. Jerome Davis, president of the union and a devout follower of the party line, was promptly defeated by Dr. George S. Counts, of Teachers College, Columbia University—though by a small minority, to be sure.

The American Federation of Teachers has a national membership of about 30,000. The A. F. of L. has a total membership of almost 5,000,000, among the vast majority of whom the Stalinists are about as popular as strikebreakers. William Green, therefore, could afford to express the natural revulsion of organized labor to the Stalinazi alliance. "It is an ugly, bestial and hateful spectacle," he said. "But it should be a highly educational one to Americans. The mask has been stripped off communism and naziism. At last they are exposed to the light as partners in tyranny."

The C. I. O., on the other hand, up until its national convention in the first two weeks of October, reflected the changing line of the Communist Party.

Attitude Toward Pact Was Acid Test

DURING SEPTEMBER a number of C. I. O. unions met in convention, among them such Communist-controlled unions as the Electrical, Radio and Maching Workers, the Transport Workers, the State, County and Municipal Workers.

Those Stalinist unions, which met during the first week in September, reflected the confusion into which the suddenness of Herr Stalin's action had thrown the party. Later conventions reflected the continuous revamping of the party line—that the pact would insure a lasting peace; that the Soviet Union was "liberating" Poland; that it was Chamberlain who had really attacked Poland and precipitated an imperialist war with which workers must have nothing to do; that Stalin had "stopped Hitler;" and that, above all, the United States must maintain a strictly isolationist position.

The evolution of the line is illustrated by what happened in the State, County and Municipal Workers' Union during that month. On September 8 "The Civil Service Standard," its official organ, ran a pro-ally editorial and a copy of a telegram to President Roosevelt urging the abolition of the embargo, "to aid the peace-loving nations and the victims of aggression."

This, of course, was a hangover from the old party line of democratic "popular frontism" and collective security. The issues of September 15 and 22 were silent both on the war and the Stalinazi pact. But at the union convention a week later Michael Quill, president of the Transport Workers, made a rousing speech for the new party line on the war and the pact, and the convention adopted a resolution to fit the line, thus completely reversing the position of a month before.

A similar evolution took place in the case of the Electrical and Radio Workers Union, the West Coast Longshoremen, the Office Workers, the Transport Workers, the National Maritime Union. In the case of the C. I. O. automobile workers, where the majority of the executive board are Stalinist but President Thomas is not, the compromise was silence.

Silence was also the word for The C. I. O. News, a national organ of the C. I. O. It has failed to mention either the pact or the war, except to insist that the United States must keep out. None of the old talk about the peace-loving democracies and collective security against Fascist aggression has appeared in it since Stalin and Hitler ganged up together. On every domestic issue its editor, Len DeCaux, has followed the party line as regularly as ever.

Finally, unlike William Green, John Lewis has never publicly indicated that disgust with Red Fascism which the American worker has every right to expect from him.

The Rank And File Under No Illusions

AND YET the whole atmosphere in the C. I. O. changed on the very day the Russo-German trade pact was announced. Before the pact Communist control was aggressive, cynical, brazen, terroristic. The day after the pact, which so clearly revealed the Fascist nature of Stalinism, such tactics no longer worked.

The Stalinist officials still followed the party line—though carefully—in the union publications which they controlled and in the conventions which they had rigged up before the pact was signed. But they were obviously afraid of the rank and file. For the rank and file instinctively understood that the new party line was pro-Hitler in the simple sense that it was for the military victory of Hitler and Stalin.

This was especially evident among the Jewish workers. In the cloak and suit and fur districts of New York City, street meetings at which Communist speakers are trying to "explain" the alliance between Herr Stalin and Tovarich Hitler are simply broken up by enraged workers.

At the national convention of the C. I. O. two things made themselves felt, in spite of the die-hard attitude of the Stalinist delegates and their sympathizers. One was rank-and-file pressure and the other was the growing anti-Communist public opinion created by European events and the exposure by the Dies committee. John L. Lewis had to move. But he could not move too ruthlessly.

Lewis Cautious In National Cleanup

Accordingly, Lewis began cautiously by cleaning as much as he dared in the national setup. He demoted John Brophy from the directorship of the whole C. I. O. to that of local industrial unions affiliated with the C. I. O.—which is a glorified bookkeeper's job.

He made Allan Haywood director of organization, a position which makes him, next to Lewis, the most important administrator in the C. I. O. Haywood is an old member of the board of the United Mine Workers, with a long anti-Communist record. Then Lewis demoted Harry Bridges, who has become the symbol of the "party line" in organized labor to the American workers, from the directorship of the whole West Coast to that of the State of California.

FINALLY, Lewis transferred all power from the executive board of 44 members, on which 24 were more or less Communist, to a board of eight national officers, with himself as president, James B. Carey as secretary, and six vice presidents instead of two, Philip Murray, of the steel workers, and Sidney Hillman, of the men's clothing workers, continue as vice presidents.

Lewis made, at this executive board session, a sweeping declaration that Stalinist agencies and policies would not be tolerated, and warned all regional directors and national C. I. O. officials not to hire Stalinists as secretaries or assistants, as there was evidence to show that these people served as spies for the Communist party.

To sum up: the Stalin-Hitler alliance was a terrific blow to Stalinism in the American labor movement. The A. F. of L. doesn't have to worry about it very much. And in the C. I. O. John L. Lewis, who has never been a Communist himself has finally been forced to move against it.

Its future, however, depends a great deal of developments in Europe. Once the American people fully realize that Stalin and Hitler have a true military alliance and that the theory that Stalin will "get" Hitler is so much propagandist eyewash, it will be impossible for any Stalinist—save possibly as an under-cover agent for the G. P. U.—to function in our progressive world, especially in our organized labor movement.

Party Harmony

By Mark Sullivan

Peace in Congress

A NEWSPAPERMAN familiar with the inner circle of the New Deal, Mr. Ernest K. Lindley, reports thus:

"The President is planning to make the coming session of Congress as non-controversial as possible."

For this attitude on the part of Mr. Roosevelt, one very good reason is the war in Europe. Justifiably, Mr. Roosevelt wishes harmony in Congress for the sake of national unity in face of the war. He wishes to avoid controversy on domestic issues, lest that lead to controversy on foreign issues that may arise. Any day, some incident arising abroad may require Congress to consider policies as important as the neutrality statute, to which Congress gave some six weeks of debate.

Another reason, no doubt, lies behind Mr. Roosevelt's wish that the coming session of Congress be "non-controversial." The only controversy that can arise, that would be politically troublesome to the President, would be controversy between the two wings of the Democratic Party. Controversy between the Democrats and Republicans in Congress need trouble him not at all. When the Republicans have only 23 Senators to the Democrats' 69, and only 169 Representatives to the Democrats' 260—in such a setup, opposition by the Republicans can amount to little. It can amount to little, that is, provided the large Democratic majority stands solid. It is controversy within the Democratic majority, between the regular Democrats and the New Dealers, that Mr. Roosevelt has to fear—and, on the eve of a Presidential election, must wish earnestly to avoid.

Nevertheless, domestic issues must arise in the coming session. And on those issues there must be controversy—unless Mr. Roosevelt is willing to go very far in appeasement.

THE COMING session ought to be—must be, if the country is to have recovery—a session for overhauling the New Deal legislation of the past six years. It is overhauling that is needed, not repeal (except possibly as to one or two measures). The overhauling is indispensable—if the New Deal is to be made workable, if the country is to have durable business recovery.

Mr. Roosevelt knows this. He said it, in an indirect way, in the message he read to this Congress when it first sat, last January 4.

Mr. Roosevelt had seen the lesson of the 1938 elections. He had seen his personal attempt to "purge" Democratic Senators fail. He had seen the Republicans almost double their representation in the House, rising from 90 to 169. It was clear the New Deal must retreat—or probably suffer a worse setback, quite possibly defeat, in 1940.

So Mr. Roosevelt, as the new Congress sat, said the New Deal must be trimmed down. He said it suavely, indirectly, in the best manner of strategic retreat conducted with the manner of standing firm. Reviewing the whole body of New Deal legislation, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"We see things now that we could not see along the way . . . We had to forge new tools for a new role of government in democracy . . . Some of these tools had to be roughly shaped, and still need some machining down."

Congress, taking Mr. Roosevelt at his word, embarked upon "machining down" the New Deal. Among other measures, Congress overhauled WPA—preserving it, but bringing its sprawling ramifications mto some degree of order and control.

But the "machining down" of the New Deal done by Congress in the session of early this year was only a beginning.

Nearly every major New Deal innovation needs overhauling.

Today And Tomorrow

Congress To Face Budget And Labor Problems

THE TWO main domestic problems which will come before the next Congress are the budget and labor. Both bear directly upon defense and upon foreign policy, and both problems can be and should be taken in hand with the needs of the future as a guiding principle. For the present budget and the existing relation between the Federal Government and labor express an attitude of mind that belongs to the great depression of the pre-war era. This attitude of mind is now antiquated and, unless the Administration takes the leadership now in altering this attitude of mind, there will in a very few months develop serious practical difficulties.

The principle of the present budget is that several billions must be spent by the Government abnormally in order to provide large numbers of people with work that would not otherwise be offered to them and with a purchasing power that they would not otherwise have. The budget is based, in short, on the idea that there is an insufficient demand to bring into full productive use the economic resources of the country.

The labor policy has been based upon the same idea. By means of the labor organizations and the collective bargaining which the Government has fostered, by means of legislation dealing with wages and hours and conditions of work, and by means of the work relief policy which segregates much unskilled labor from the labor market, the Government and the unions have attacked the pre-war unemployment by creating an artificial scarcity of labor. Then by failing to provide for the industrial training of unskilled workers while they were on relief, by assenting to the labor union policies of restricting apprenticeship and the recruitment of skilled workers, the Administration has brought about a condition where we shall soon find that there is a dangerous shortage of skilled labor in the midst of huge unemployment.

Position Today Requires Reversal of Attitude

WHATEVER MAY have been the human and political justification for the budget and the labor policies, the position today requires a reversal of the attitude of mind which has governed those policies.

If we look ahead only a few months, it is clear, I think, that the problem will no longer be how to make work for idle men and idle resources but how to produce enough to repair the wastage of the war and to develop enough armaments to make this country strong in a world that is ever more dangerous. The problem of the budget is, therefore, not how to reduce the national expenditure by X or Y amount but how to eliminate unnecessary, but politically entrenched, expenditures. And the problem of labor is how to turn from a policy of making work by imposing restrictions in favor of a policy of enhanced production by removing restrictions, increasing the number of skilled workers, and alleviating the antagonisms between management and employes.

Thus it is evident that the intensification of the war in European waters combined with the ominous developments in the Far East call not only for a larger Navy than we now have. They call for a greatly accelerated construction of the naval program. We cannot feel secure merely by "authorizing" a Navy that will not actually be completed until 1944. If we need a Navy of the size contemplated in the Vinson bill which is to be presented to Congress in January, we shall need that Navy much sooner than 1944. But in order to have it sooner than 1944 we shall have to invest large sums of money in plants to construct the Navy and we shall have to recruit a skilled labor force that is not now available. That is why the budget needs to be radically altered with a view to eliminating unnecessary public works that use up materials and labor, and why the labor policy of the Government and of the unions needs to be altered in order to make skilled labor available for the expansion of heavy industry.

Policy Change Needed To Speed Armaments

THIS CHANGE of policy is necessary not only for the quicker construction of our own armaments. It is necessary also for the accelerated production of the armaments that the Allies are buying here, and it will be necessary for the production of all kinds of goods, of ships and other necessities, which the war is destroying, which we alone can produce, to carry on the indispensable trade of the neutrals of the world.

The problem of the American economy is no longer how to bring idle men and idle resources together in order to produce relatively unneeded public improvements. Within a few months it will be evident to all that we shall be the only great industrial system in the world that is not ravaged by the war; the problem then will be how we can produce efficiently and enough. For ten years we have worried about an excessive supply with inadequate demand, in the period we have now entered we must worry about inadequate supply in the presence of ever more insistent demand.

To prepare ourselves for this new condition, our first need is to bring the budget under control in order that it will be feasible to reform it. Now bringing the budget under control means taking measures to eliminate the pressure for political expenditures. The obvious way, in fact the only way, to do that is to broaden the base of the visible taxes, namely the income tax, so that there may be at least twice as many voters who pay direct taxes as there are today. There is no other means by which political spending can be made politically unprofitable.

Only by reducing drastically the politica spending can a budget be constructed which is national in purpose, which is devoted primarily to those measures of national defense and internal development, and popular security that are so critically necessary in the present state of the world. It is doubtful whether the Government can afford to spend less than it is now spending. What is essential is that it should spend for national necessities and not for the political appeasement of pressure groups.

Administration Should Promote Program

AS REGARDS labor the situation calls for a state of mind in all of the agencies of the Government which insists that the corollary of the right to organize and bargain collectively is the duty to avoid disputes, stoppage of work, the slowing down of production, and to promote the training and recruiting of more and more skilled labor.

Such a labor program ought to be promoted by the Administration precisely because it has demonstrated its friendship for labor, and it ought to be led by men like the President, Senator Wagner and Senator Norris, whose motives cannot be suspected. This Administration can reform the budget and the labor policy far more readily than can its successor. In fact, one may doubt whether its successor would be able to reform them without provoking a most disruptive partisan and class struggle. Mr. Roosevelt can. And since he has seen so clearly the immense responsibilities that have fallen to this country, and has foreseen so well the developments of the world crisis, he will, we must suppose, rise again to the occasion and prepare adequately for the future.

Your Figure, Madame!

Leaving Crust Saves Pie Calories; Mince Has Highest Count, Raisin Lowest

A WOMAN'S PAGE writer can do no wrong—and get away with it! Here's a San Francisco lady taking me soundly to task because I've been undercharging on the calories in orange juice!

I have known all along that I was a calorie or two shy on the orange juice. The actual count is 55 calories per three and one-half ounces, which is a scant half glass. And from now you're going to be charged 55!

I really would prefer you to think there are a few less calories in orange juice and a few more in pie—but the overcharge on pie has been entirely unintentional. As you know, apple, apricot, peach and butterscotch pies are always quoted as 100 calories per inch at the circumference and a three-inch wedge at 300 calories. But the latest calorie count on pie lists a three-inch wedge of any of the aforementioned as not more than 225 calories. And apple pie, which is probably your favorite, counts only 200 calories per three inches. Just think of it! All these years you could have had four and one-half inches of apple pie for those 300 calories!

Leave Crust, Save Calories

Honestly, when I went to school, pie counted 100 calories per inch. But that's progressive education for you!

Even with the lower calorie count, pie still is to be reckoned with in weight control. In case you're interested, you can avoid 66 2/3 calories by leaving either the upper or lower crust on the plate. One nine-inch crust contains 600 calories. Or, you could cut down on the number by using those crisscross strips for the top instead of the regular crust.

Salads also are coming in for closer scrutiny. A reducer writes to demand what the difference is between a combination salad, a chopped green salad, a mixed salad and a tossed green salad. Well . . . they're all green salads! But since you are supposed to have a green vegetable every day I like to call the salad by different names for the sake of variety!

Pie Count Varies Widely

But a combination salad could mean lettuce, tomato, green pepper and celery, with the lettuce in sections, the tomato quartered. A variety of greens can be combined for the mixed salads. Take your pick—lettuce, romaine, chicory, watercress or escarole, together with green pepper, thin onion and radish slices and cucumbers. If French dressing is used, count it as 65 calories per tablespoon.

To revert to pie . . . don't get the idea that all pies count only 100 calories per one and one-half inches. Some count 100 calories for three-fourths inch! For an accurate check on your favorite, consult the revised list of pie calories given below.

ALL PIES NINE INCHES AT DIAMETER, THE SLICE THREE INCHES AT THE OUTSIDE

Mary Haworth's Mail

Indignant Girl Calls Midshipmen Conceited Spongers, With No Sense of Social Obligation

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Last summer my sister and I met two midshipmen through an acquaintance of the family. They were in Washington on week-end leave and asked us to go to a movie. My mother suggested that we ask them to dinner and they promptly accepted. Mother was struck by the resemblance of one of the boys to my brother, who was killed two years ago in a crash. She liked him so much that she invited them both back to spend a whole week-end with us. They came and my sister and I took them around and showed them the town. Father paid for everything, since they were our guests.

Some weeks later they dropped in to call and as we have a big house and servants, and they seemed to have no plans, we just naturally asked them to spend the week-end with us. Again we entertained them beautifully and they seemed to have a fine time. Well, they went away and both wrote us girls notes thanking us. But they didn't have the decency to send their regards to Mother and Dad and they never wrote after that or attempted in any way to return what we had done for them.

Since then my sister has become engaged, so she doesn't care, but it has given me a perfect contempt for midshipmen. They seem to be a conceited bunch of spongers with no sense of obligation! Apparently they use people, get all they can and drop them without returning anything. I have never been to Annapolis, although I have lived in Washington all my life.

Some of my girl friends at school say that what I have told them is typical of midshipmen, so I have come to the conclusion (there are exceptions, of course), that while the Naval Academy can make officers, it can't make gentlemen. Please answer and tell me what you think of the whole business, and if you think I have reason to be

DISGUSTED.

"Hell Hath No Fury Like a Woman Scorned"

DEAR DISGUSTED: Granted that the boys may have been remiss in courtesy in failing to address their "bread-and-butter" letters directly to your parents, still, I hardly think that constitutes sufficient justification for your bitter arraignment of midshipmen as a consistently bad-mannered social group. As a matter of fact, the tone of your letter reminds me of an old saying, "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned." It seems obvious that your grudge against these particular midshipmen has to do with the fact that they failed to come through with invitations to you (or your sister) to participate in certain gala functions at the Naval Academy. And this suggests, in turn, that your kindness to them was not entirely unselfseeking. Which recalls the proverb to the effect that, "people in glass houses shouldn't throw stones."

Frankly, I don't feel qualified to undertake a one-woman defense of midshipmen in this instance, although I might say in passing that these young officers-and-gentlemen in the making are kept on a pretty tight rein, both in regard to spending money and time out for play. Moreover, while my acquaintanceship with the Naval Academy's social life is slight indeed, it is my impression that the young men are continuously subjected to a great deal more social attention, of a benevolent sort, than they could ever hope to repay in kind or even in part. About the most they can do, in a general way, is to deport themselves in a courteous and appreciative manner while being "hosted," and follow through with conventional "thank-you" notes in due time.

I shall be interested to learn what the midshipmen themselves may have to say in reply to your charge that "they seem to be a conceited bunch of spongers with no sense of obligation . . . who use people, get all they can and drop them without returning anything." I cannot believe that they would be willing to ignore that scathing indictment entirely.

Are Living Expenses Exorbitant Here?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have often visited in Washington and have always liked the city. Now I have a chance to come here to live, and am wondering if I should. I understand that living costs are exorbitant and I am afraid that I would not be very happy unless I could live here as I have been accustomed to living elsewhere.

I subscribe to The Post and would appreciate your advising me. If I come here, I shall receive a salary of $120 a month. On that salary, would it be possible for me to obtain an attractive room, nicely furnished, with a private bath and selective menu in a private home or apartment in the Northwest section of the city? I would not care for the boarding house type of accommodation, nor would I want to share quarters with three or four other persons, as I understand many people do here.

I would want a room to myself, in quiet surroundings, and I should like to get such accommodations for not more than $50 a month, if possible. I have been told that most landladies in Washington prefer men. Is that true? I am a middle-aged woman and would do no entertaining, cooking or laundry. I do not smoke or drink, keep early hours and am accustomed to staying by myself a lot, because I study and write. I shall appreciate your opinions.

MRS. G.

The Probable Cost Of Desired Accomodations

DEAR MRS. G.: It is extremely doubtful whether you will find the type of accommodations you want, in the Northwest section of the city, for less than $65 a month at a minimum. However, much depends upon your own personality and the amount of effort you are ready to put into the search. Some householders would much prefer the "ideal boarder" for less money than the more exacting guest at a maximum rate.

It is true that many landladies here outspokenly prefer men boarders to women, but that, I believe, is true in most cities. The woman boarder is allegedly too much underfoot, in the majority of cases, whereas the man boarder supposedly is out of the way except when taking his meals and his rest. But judging from your description of yourself you should be as unobtrusive as the proverbial mouse.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Cleaning Floors

Anything spilled on the floor should be promptly wiped up with a cloth or with soft paper, such as a paper towel. If rolls of dust collect in corners, or under beds or other furniture, you can remove them quickly with the vacuum cleaner or carpet sweeper. Then a rub-up with a clean dry mop will leave floors bright and shining.

Thanksgiving Nicest Holiday Because One Eats, Sleeps It Off

New York, Nov. 27.

THE NATIONAL CONFUSION over Thanksgiving Day this year has had few repercussions on the little gang I infest around here. Though the twenty-third was the official day in this State (and the Fifth avenue merchants are happy thereat) we have just gone along with our plans for celebrating two—one for New York State and one for Connecticut. This simplifies the whole matter, if you're a guest. If you're a hostess, that's quite another horse.

Around town here the price of a bang-up feast for the day was just about as it was a year ago. Turkeys cost from 31 to 35 cents a pound in this territorry, though if you live in the silk belt you could have gone as high as 45 for the bird. Cranberries and sweet potatoes, on the contrary, were a bit cheaper. On the whole, the annual bout of gluttony cost New Yorkers just about the usual amount—which is plenty if you have a long line of youngsters down the table as father rassles the bird to a fall.

As usual, Thanksgiving has been the traditional American feast day here—celebrated strictly at home or at he creaking boards of hospitable friends. For this reason it is always the nicest of the great days in New York, most of the others being grabbed as occasions for public whooping and hollering.

Thank Heaven for one holiday when we can commit the deadly sin of gluttony by authority of the President or the Governor or both, and then lie back quietly for a well-earned snooze after the gastronomical orgy. We don't have to dance or play bridge or beat on tables with toy mallets—just gorge and relax.

Alibi Anthology

MRS. HENRIETTA D'GOOFEY, famous reformer, is on the verge of becoming an author. At her press conference yesterday, the redoubtable founder and president of the Do Something About It League, announced that she would soon publish a book devoted to "The chief problem facing American womanhood today."

Mrs. DeGoofey

"Do you mean the problem of attracting men, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a "charm" editor.

"No indeed!" was the reply. "Now personally I have never found that a problem. In fact, my chief worry has been fending off the advances of men.

"No, the problem that is getting more serious every day for every woman is this: 'How can I get out of doing all the things my friends want me to do?'"

"You don't mean that you have solved that problem!" exclaimed a club editor.

"We-ll, not entirely. But I have learned a great many tricks of the trade that I should like to pass on to other women. So I intend to bring out a volume entitled 'The Answer Is No!', which will be a handbook of excuses for the busy woman."

Smallpox Exposure Insures Privacy

"What are some of these excuses, Mrs. DeGoofey?" eagerly asked an introvert woman reporter.

"You will have to buy the book to find that out. However, I will give you a few hints as to its contents. One of my main divisions is entitled 'Convincing Maladies.' In this I point out the pitfalls in giving sickness as an excuse for refusing social invitations. For instance, I have found that the most amateurish and least believed of all excuses is that of saying you have a cold. Now you are bound to get well of the cold in a few days—and get another invitation. Then you have to produce another cold and finally you will cry 'Wolf! Wolf!' so much that no one will believe you.

"Now it is much more sensible to have chronic sinus trouble or possibly migraine headaches. Moreover, if you tell your friends you have a cold they will frequently insist that you come anyway. So in dealing with a high-pressure hostess it is more effective to explain that you have recently been exposed to smallpox.

"In this section of my handbook I also discuss mental eccentricities, as claustrophobia or fear of crowds, and allergic reactions to shrimps or chicken patties, as a means of evading too much social life.

"Another division of my book will relate to 'Arriving Relatives.' Now most persons are very crude in using the relative excuse. They merely announce that Aunt Fanny from Dubuque has arrived unexpectedly. Now every hostess knows that no one will stay at home on account of Aunt Fanny.

"Moreover, if you are going to have relatives arrive, why not have them interesting and glamorous—as a rich uncle from the Klondike, a cousin who married a Georgian prince, a brother-in-law who has been exploring in the Andes? Of course, it is possible that your hostess will insist that you bring such relatives with you. So, to avoid that, you should always have them arriving at uncertain hours or stopping off between trains.

Encyclopedias For Defense

"Still another division of my book is devoted to 'Home Work.' In this I discuss the excuse that you are busily engaged on some urgent task, writing a book against a publisher's deadline, or executing some murals for a filling station, or cataloguing a collection of mustache cups. In that connection I have discovered one very neat little trick for writers who wish some time of their own. It is this—Be engaged on some herculean study. Otherwise you will have to complete your book eventually or explain why it is not published. Now my excuse for not going places or doing things is that I am compiling an encyclopedia on women. Naturally, no one ever expects me to get through.

"I will also have chapters in my book on many special problems such as 'How to Avoid Serving on a Committee,' 'How to Avoid Being an Old Standby in a Club,' 'How to Avoid Attending Lectures You Ought to Hear,' 'How to Escape Family Reunions,' 'How to Escape College Alumnae Get Togethers,' 'How to get Rid of Friends Who Are Organizers.'"

"Mrs. DeGoofey, do you find these excuses foolproof yourself?" asked a political columnist.

"Absolutely. By means of them I am becoming virtually a recluse."

"I am sorry to hear that, Mrs. DeGoofey," said a night club editor. "I had hoped you would have dinner with me tonight, then attend the theater and later visit some of the town's night spots. But of course, now . . ."

"Wait a minute!" interrupted Mrs. DeGoofey. "Now that is a different matter. I should be delighted to accept your invitation, young man. When will you call?"

House Expresses Personality of Its Owner

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

We've always a flower handy to toss to the home-maker who uses her pencil as much as her broom. Because the efficiency of a house, like an office or factory, depends on the executive department. An hour or two on Monday morning, spent planning the week's menus and making out orders, lists and schedules, will save hours each day of helter skelter management.

Yet we don't blame a lady for not wanting to go grimly at such a task from behind a hard-boiled office desk. But there are plenty of desks that serve very practical purposes yet are gracious enough to do furniture honors in quite an ambitious room.

A living room we know and like is dominated by a charming round desk of 18th century English mahogany—it is a useful desk for all its graceful design. And the lady who runs a pleasant home from this desk has expressed her sense of taste and order in every detail of the room.

The walls are Wedgwood blue, the rug is a soft hued Kirman of intricate pattern. Furniture of Georgian mahogany, upholstery in blues and cafe au lait, draperies in a faded floral design predominantly grey-blue in effect . . . there you have the essentials.

Marilynn Himes Captures Society In Debut at Swanky Tea Dance

Party at F Street Club Attended by Several Hundred Cave-Dwellers, but Diplomats and Official Residents Are Conspicuously Absent

By Hope Ridings Miller

PRETTY, PETITE Marilynn Himes, daughter of former Representative and Mrs. Joseph H. Himes of Washington and Frederick, Md., captured the spotlight and captivated Capital society yesterday afternoon when she made her bow at one of the largest tea dances of the season.

The swanky 1925 F Street Club was scene of the party, which was attended by several hundred residentials and out-of-towners. Diplomats were conspicuously missing; so, for the most part, were official Washingtonians; but debutantes, cave-dwelling Capitalites and top-drawer visitors were very much in the gay picture.

One of the most attractive of this year's big crop of buds, Miss Himes also is one of the most popular. I could easily understand why, as I greeted her yesterday. Her liquid brown eyes twinkle as her lips curve into a smile. Her handclasp is warm and so is her greeting. She'll go a long way—that pint-sized number, who has plenty of glamour along with a saving sense of humor that won't allow her to take anything—not even a formal debut—too seriously.

Mr. and Mrs. Himes and their daughter received in the handsomely furnished drawing room of the club. I liked the rather unusual arrangement by which the father was as much in the greeting picture as the mother and the debutante.

First person you shook hands with was Mr. Himes, who sent you on down the short line. Mrs. Himes, who was next, was trimly turned out in a black taffeta and velvet frock, made with a full skirt, a fitted bodice and an Elizabethan neckline. A corsage of orchids completed her costume.

The debutante's frock of silver and blue lame was made on simple lines with a full skirt gathered in to a basque that was accented with a V-neckline and short sleeves. A miniature bouquet in her light-brown hair, and an old-fashioned bouquet, tied with a pink streamer, further accented her lovely ensemble.

Huge bouquets of roses, chrysanthemums, carnations—every blossom you can imagine—were arranged three-deep around the wall and formed a pretty background for the receiving trio, as well as for the big company that overflowed into the other rooms of the club.

Dancing Proves Popular Diversion

Dancing to Sidney's music was the order of the afternoon in the dining room that had been cleared for that purpose. The bar was crowded to the walls, and so was the room where the tea table was set. Tall white tapers and a big bouquet of white roses made up the decorative scheme, and turkey sandwiches, mushroom patties, delicious hot biscuits filled with ham were only a few items on the menu designed to tempt the appetite and ruin the figure.

Alternating at the tea table were Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner, whose smart black ensemble was set off with an orchid corsage (the latter, by the way, was a sort of badge for all the assisting hostesses); Mrs. Lee Warren, Mrs. Frank T. Hines, Mrs. Henry Miller, Mrs. James F. Mitchell, Mrs. Randall Hagner and Mrs. Caspar Whitney, of New York, aunt of Miss Himes, who will present her to Gotham society later this season.

Mrs. Kenna Elkins, with whom the debutante is staying here, was another wearing an orchid corsage, and still another was Mrs. Morgan Wing, jr., daughter of Mrs. Whitney, down from New York especially for the debut.

Buds Are Belles To Lively Music

Drawing room notes: Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt and Mrs. Eldridge Jordan arrived together, both smartly turned out in black, and Mrs. Jordan as usual wearing a corsage of gardenias. Mrs. Ralph Worthington was seen going down the receiving line just as the former United States Minister to Canada and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper appeared at the door. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Woods were glimpsed in the crowd, also Mrs. Hiram Bingham, Mrs. Royal T. McKenna and Mrs. Thomas Cowell.

Seen dancing: Debutantes ran away with the spotlight on the dance floor. Miss Patricia Hurley, wearing a bright red frock with a snatch of a black hat, was a belle of the party. Equally popular was Miss Ellen Hemes Flowerree, whose black taffeta frock was sprigged with a tiny embroidered design. Also a much-sought-after dancer was pretty Patricia Prochnik, whose bright red jacket made her easy to find in the throng.

Miss Nancy Leiter, William P. MacCracken, Canfield Hines, brother of the debutante of the day; Clarence Hewes and Pendleton Turner were others who took a turn or two to music before the afternoon was over. Still others seen dancing were Debutante Joan McKenna, Stephen B. Elkins, Miss Elise Hill, Miss Peggy Essary and Miss Eleanor Meem.

In the bar: On the way from the dining room to the drawing room, where the tea table was a center of interest, a number of guests stopped for a drink, found the gathering pleasant and lingered to enjoy themselves. Among those I spotted in the crowd there were Mr. and Mrs. John Crosby, the latter's bright red hat being one of the prettiest in the parade; Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Roger Whiteford, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall O. Exnicios, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Kacy, Miss Rosalyn Buchanan, Miss Anne Sperry and Wolcott Waggaman.

Many Notables Seen in Crowd

Near the tea table: Mrs. John R. Williams, accompanied by Mrs. Harry Kerr; Mrs. Joseph Leiter, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr., Pendleton Hogan, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Owsley, Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis, former Senator and Mrs. Augustine Lonergan, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Stanley White, Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, Mrs. Thad Brown, who with her husband returned Monday from Columbus, Ohio, where they were widely entertained during a two-week stay and where Gov. and Mrs. John Bricker gave a formal dinner for them Saturday night.

Following yesterday's tea, Miss Himes and a few of her friends went to the theater and later finished off the evening dancing at a local hotel. Those in the company included Mrs. Morgan Wing, jr., Miss Ellen Hewes, Flowerree, Miss Nancy Leiter, Randall Hagner, Stephen B. Elkins 3d, Richard Bolling, Canfield Himes and Harold Fangboner.

Miss Himes will be feted at a number of parties from now until Christmas. But the biggest item on her crowded calendar is a ball to be given in her honor December 21 at the Sulgrave Club.

Mrs. Partridge Sells 3 Watercolor Paintings Half Hour After Exhibit Opens

THIRTY MINUTES after the opening on Sunday of her exhibit of water colors at the Junior League Gallery, Mrs. Daniel Partridge had sold three of her paintings. Mrs. Duncan Phillips and Mrs. Henry Strong were among the buyers.

Mrs. Partridge has the energy of a Mrs. Roosevelt. In addition to her painting, she runs her house and two children, plays the piano, sings beautifully, square dances and is writing a book all in verse. Her sister, Mrs. Duncan Phillips, is equally known as a talented painter, and their brother, William Acker, is with the Freer Gallery. He is now in Holland, after spending a year in Japan, continuing his study of art. Mrs. Acker and their children were recently shipped home to Washington from the Netherlands.

At her opening Mrs. Partridge wore a white Russian blouse over a black skirt, and a Cossack hat of Persian lamb. Among those who dropped in were Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Stanley-Brown, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. C. Smith and J. B. Wyckoff.

MRS. WILLIAM J. CALHOUN, who lives in an old palace in Peiping, part of which was once a temple, is going to return there in January when she concludes a visit in this country. In her handsome residence, one of the most beautiful feaures of which is a hallway with lacquered columns, she entertains all prominent Americans and leading Peiping citizens.

At one of the many parties being given for her during her stay in Washington, Mrs. Calhoun was describing to us life in Peiping in the war. Things are going on about as usual except for an overabundance of Japanese sentries and an increase in the cost of living—coal has become especially high. Occasionally the residents hear guns in the distance, and they have to cancel the trips which everybody used to make into the western hills, taking along servants and supplies and spending the nights in Chinese temples en route.

Mrs. Calhoun will leave the end of the week for Chicago to visit relatives. She is a sister of the late Harriet Monroe, well known poet, and founder, editor, and financial godmother of the magazine Poetry. Mrs. Calhoun's late husband was United States Minister to China, and she has made her home there ever since.

MRS. HAROLD WALKER has bought a house on quiet and peaceful Leroy place and is installed there for the winter. Both she and her daughter, Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert, jr., were among the guests at the small and very pleasant tea which Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt, Mrs. Walker's sister, gave on Saturday afternoon for Mrs. Granger Brown, of New York, who is Mrs. Arthur Krock's sister.

One of the guests jokingly asked Mrs. Walker if she did not find daughter, Evie, something of a problem child at times, and her answer was: "When we were living in Mexico just before Evie was born, I asked all my friends to burn candles praying that she would be twins. Now I realize that God knows best."

Mrs. Randall Hagner, wearing a sable coat over her beige wool dress; William Elmslie, Commander and Mme. Benech, Mrs. Henry Leonard, next-door neighbor of the hosts, E. Pendleton Turner, and several others were among the guests. Like many old Georgetown houses, Mrs. Finkenstaedt's has a long living room with two fireplaces—very cozy on a cold day.

THAT SAME EVENING Mr. and Mrs. Krock gave a dinner for Mrs. Brown in their new home, one of the most attractively decorated in Georgetown. The floor-length curtains are of white chintz with a bright flower design, and the same material is used on one of the large sofas. Another couch is a delicate shade of yellow. The floor is covered with a large rug in a pale gray shade to harmonize with the white walls. Mrs. Brown wore an unusually pretty dress, black net with a border of matching velvet at the hem of the full skirt.

Many toasts were trunk to another guest, Victor Mallet, who leaves the British Embassy this week to become his country's Minister to Sweden.

FUTURE DINNER GUESTS of Clarence Hewes are in danger of no longer being offered the steaming cup of China tea with which Mr. Hewes always speeds the parting guests. Mr. Hewes has opened up his last box and is afraid he cannot get any more, owing to the war. His pretty niece, Ellen Hewes Flowerree, who is one of the season's belles, will be guest of honor at a dinner which will be given December 8 by Mrs. Walter Denegre.

Dr. Coulter Urges Sane Fight on Tuberculosis

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

The Post Club Editor.

Less emotion and more common sense in dealing with the tuberculosis situation in the District was urged yesterday by Dr. A. Barklie Coulter in a talk before the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs at Hotel Twenty-Four Hundred. Dr. Coulter, who is director of the Bureau for Tuberculosis, declared the root of the problem was to be reached through dealing with adults rather than children and discounted the health school entirely as a factor in solving it.

Pointing to the decrease in the number of children's deaths, attributed to the disease from 66 in 1936 to 36 in 1938, he credited this reduction largely to the hospitalization of a larger number of adults who would have spread it, since the opening of the adult unit at Glenn Dale Sanitarium.

75% Live Two Weeks

Seventy-five per cent of the children who have succumbed to it in the last two years have lived less than two weeks, he said, indicating that the health school would have been of no advantage to them even if they had been old enough to attend it—and most were not.

Dr. Coulter startled his audience by telling them that children in the health school were "no more tuberculous than you are."

"It cannot be too strongly stressed that the primary type of infection has in no way a detrimental bearing on the general health of the individual," said Dr. Coulter, "and he is not a menace to anyone else with whom he comes in contact. Treatment is not indicated for these individuals and they should not be designated as tuberculous. It is noteworthy that only two white children have died from any form of tuberculosis in the District during the first nine months of 1939."

"Don't Scare Children"

Dr. Coulter declared the results of making "a psychological invalid" of a child placed in the health school were serious to his health and a detriment to his future success.

"You could scare more children to death than have actually died from tuberculosis," he said. "Every day the child takes a bus for the health school it is ingrained in that child that he has something the others haven't got. If he wants to return to regular school or, in later life to get insurance or get a job, he has this hanging over him. We have no right to stigmatize a child that way. And these pupils are no more tuberculous than you are."

Dr. Coulter urged that persons employing nursemaids and domestic servants require health certificates. The Bureau of Tuberculosis is now offering to employment agencies free service in giving tests to persons seeking employment through them, he said. He proposed this as one method of locating adults with open cases of the disease which he said were responsible for its spread. He advocated hospitalization of such individuals until they were cured and no longer likely to infect others.

"What Can We Do?"

"What do you want us to do to help?" one of the Federation members asked at the close of Dr. Coulter's talk.

Although explaining that by Presidential order he could not discuss the budget, Dr. Coulter quoted the opinion of other authorities to the effect the "public health is purchasable."

Dr. Coulter was introduced by Mrs. Arthur C. Watkins, chairman of the department of education of the Federation.

Mrs. Ernest Humparey Daniel, president, presided at part of the meeting and then turned it over to Mrs. Ruth Snodgrass, as she was going to New Jersey.

Resolutions, presented by Mrs. Ernest W. Howard, legislative chairman, were passed. She urged that municipal hospitals be retained within the Health Department in any reorganization plan adopted, opposed the proposal to increase the salaries of the District Commissioners to $12,000 a year, opposed the proposed additional 1 cent gasoline tax on the basis of its being discriminatory; indorsed the application of the agricultural marketing agreement to the D. C. milk market to provide 5-cent milk for persons on relief, and commended the work of the Dies committee, urging appropriation of funds for its continuance.

Mrs. Dunbar Talks

The afternoon session was addressed by Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, who was a guest at the meeting. She discussed the work of the general federation which will be supported through the foundation fund to which clubs throughout the country are making golden jubilee contributions. Mrs. Frederic Newburgh, chairman of the card party given recently by the District, announced that the proceeds from it were $476.

The federation accepted for membership the Junior Alliance, now more than 1 year old, which Mrs. Newburgh, president of the Housekeepers' Alliance, founded and of which Mrs. Jay P. Conger is president and Mrs. William H. Hessick past president.

The morning program included a group of light opera selections, presented by members of the Columbia Light Opera Company and, in the afternoon, there were motion pictures showing activities of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club.

Civic Expert Lauds Capital City Planning

City planning with attention to housing, space for recreation centers and other needs definitely has improved living conditions in Washington within the last 20 years, in the opinion of Miss Harlean James, executive secretary of the American Planning and Civic Association.

Miss James and Mrs. Joshua Evans, who gave entertaining personal glimpses of the early residents of Washington, spoke last night at a dinner meeting of the Business and Professional Women's Club at the Admiral Hotel.

Although accepted street locations in a city are static, other things may be changed to meet modern conditions, said Miss James. Amazing changes can be made through the use of land, and even buildings, which often seem permanent, are greatly altered over a period of years.

Appointment of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission in 1926 was the outcome of recommendations made following a survey by the association she represents, she said. She has been with the organization since 1921.

Through the commission's work it has been possible to purchase recreation areas in sections before development has gone ahead, thus preserving open spaces in what soon have become heavily populated areas.

She commended the work of the Alley Dwelling Authority and predicted broad improvements in the next decade.

The program last night was planned by Miss Elizabeth Haney, chairman of the club's public affairs committee, assisted by Clara Beetle, Rose C. Homann, Emma T. Hahn, Ruby Nevins and Cirena Mahoney.

Mrs. Roosevelt Will Address Speaking Class

Mrs. William M. Whittington, who is now in Greenwood, Miss., has announced that Mrs. Roosevelt will speak at the opening meeting January 11 of Mrs. Hugh Butler's fifth winter course in practical platform speaking to be held for the wives of members of Congress.

Mrs. Whittington, who won the second prize in last year's class, will be the chairman of the meeting. Mrs. John J. Sperkman, of Huntsville, Ala., who won the first prize, as the one who showed the most improvement, will introduce Mrs. Roosevelt. Wives of the members of the House and the Senate and leaders in club work will be invited.

Mrs. Whittington, wife of Representative Whittington, is former president of the Congressional Club.

Ruby Black Calls Mrs. Roosevelt People's Advocate

Mrs. Roosevelt is a major channel through which the Government goes to the people and the people go to the Government, Ruby Black, Washington newspaper correspondent, told the Monday luncheon meeting of the Woman's National Democratic Club yesterday. Her subject was "It's Fun to Write About Washington, Nerve Center."

Miss Black, well-known member of the Senate Press Gallery and president of the Women's National Press Club, operates a news bureau of her own, serving several out-of-town dailies, and also reports the press conferences and activities of Mrs. Roosevelt in Washington for the United Press. She served as co-editor of the recent book, "Washington, Nerve Center," a volume of photographs of Washington by Edward Rosskam, for which Mrs. Roosevelt wrote a foreword.

"One of the greatest contributions the Roosevelt Administration has made to democracy," she told the Democratic Women, "is the bringing of Government and people closer together. More than ever before the Government considers the welfare of the individual person and more than ever before the individual person, wherever he is, is more concerned with what his Government does."

First Lady Urges Jnuior League To Form Broad Contacts

Mrs. Roosevelt Addresses Session of Course On Volunteer Social Service Work; Praises Experiment and Interpretation

Provisional members of the Washington Junior League yesterday were addressed by Mrs. Roosevelt at one of the sessions of the course to prepare them for volunteer social service work. The meeting was at Junior League headquarters, 2001 Massachusetts avenue.

The First Lady, who is one of the founders of the New York Junior League and continues her interest both in that and in the Washington group, emphasized the importance of broad contacts as a background for any social service work, either professional or voluntary. It is necessary to understand one's community in order to understand the problems of the country, she told the Junior Leaguers. Travel, she said, is of little value unless one has the experience to interpret and the curiosity to investigate.

Answering a question as to whether a woman, not needing the income, should take money for the job she is doing or do volunteer work for the satisfaction of serving, Mrs. Roosevelt declared it was a purely personal matter. She declared there was increasing need for women to know how to earn their own living and to have the satisfaction of knowing how to do a professional job. Women who do not need the income, but who are being paid for their work, should either be in a position which is creating employment for others or, if they make a gift of their earnings, the gift should create work for those in need of it, she said.

She credited her own experience as a Junior League worker in a New York settlement house with awakening her interest in conditions under which other people lived. She also told of having worked in the Consumers League and of having visited sweat shops in some of its investigations. From that time on, she has continued to investigate conditions in her community, she said.

The First Lady, in answer to a question, expressed the opinion that there was no reason why there should not be a place for volunteer work in public welfare agencies, but pointed out that the volunteers must be in a position to convince the agencies of the standard of their service.

Mrs. Roosevelt was introduced by Miss Cecil Lester Jones, president of the league. Mrs. Frederick Walling is chairman of the provisional training course.

Fort Davis Citizens Ask More Buses

Committee Named To Meet Capital Transit Company On Rerouting

Fort Davis Citizens Association last night went on record demanding a speed-up of schedules to alleviate transit difficulties in the section.

Members approved a resolution of Mrs. L. M. Swain which recommended a letter be sent to the W. M. A. Bus Co. urging measures to end present overcrowding. Extra bus service for school children also was sought.

A committee was appointed to meet with the Capital Transit Co. on rerouting of the Hillcrest bus so that it would pass Texas and Pennsylvania avenues southeast. Named to the committee were Mrs. L. M. Swain and William Mulkey.

Six new members were elected. They are J. C. Wood, Jack Hall, Robert E. Cox, James Thomas, Mrs. E. I. Thomas and H. T. Martin.

Mid-City Citizens

Increasing the powers of the District Commissioners to include the levying and collecting of taxes was approved last night by the Mid-City Citizens Association.

The organization, meeting in the Thomson Community Center, Twelfth and L streets northwest, expressed opposition to proposed creation of departments of finance and public works in the District Government.

Reorganization of the city government is necessary, however, "to tie together the various agencies of administration," George A. Warren, chairman of the committee on education, asserted.

"The opportunity to pass the buck is almost unlimited under the present administrative setup," he said.

Approval also was voted for expansion of the program for the education of handicapped children. The association reaffirmed its position favoring suffrage for District citizens and asked that schools be opened for community activities on Friday rather than Thursday evenings. A. J. Driscoll presided.

Georgetown Citizens

Dr. B. H. Meyer, former Interstate Commerce Commissioner, was elected president of the Georgetown Citizens Association last night, succeeding Ernest J. Lewis.

Other officers named include Rear Admiral Spencer S. Wood, first vice president; George L. Nicolson, second vice president; Maj. Wallace Streater, treasurer; Joseph I. Cavanaugh, secretary.

Members indorsed the recommendation of the Seal plan for reorganization of the District government for an independent school board. The remainder of the plan was referred to the legislative committee.

Resolutions were adopted seeking three-fold changes in the school setup. Appropriations were asked for a special staff of teachers to instruct shut-in children and action was urged on the building program sought by the Board of Education to replace old, small schools. Need for a new building and new location for the Abbott Vocation School was stressed.

North Capitol

The North Capitol Citizens Association went on record as opposing any plan for the reorganization of the District government which did not include adequate provisions for giving bona fide residents of the District a voice in the government.

The association also indorsed the proposal to establish a branch postoffice near Fourth street and Rhode Island avenue northeast, and requested the Capital Transit Company to install streamlined streetcars on North Capitol street. The secretary was instructed to send a letter to the Citizens' Forum of Columbia Heights expressing the association's regret at the death of Burd W. Payne.

Takoma Park Citizens

Takoma Park, Md.-D. C. Citizens Association has requested the Federation of Citizens' Associations to ask that the next District appropriation bill include an item for the erection of a building to house the District Supreme Court. Walter Irey, secretary of the association, announced its action last night.

The statement says that the old building in which several branches of the courts hold sittings is poor in daylight, cramped in space, and inadequate in sanitary arrangements.

Our Town: 16th Street Heights Area Progresses Rapidly

By Christine Sadler

One of the city's most choice residential areas is the section lying above Walter Reed Hospital grounds, west of Georgia avenue and east of Rock Creek Park. It includes Shepherd Park and more, too, and the residents speak of it as Sixteenth Street Heights—which is not to be confused with Sixteenth Street Highlands, the subdivision below the Army reservation.

In Sixteenth Street Heights, the Blair and Lee property coming from Maryland overlaps with the land on which Washington's one and only Governor—Alexander R. Shepherd—had his summer home.

Traveled Tree-lined Lane

"Boss" Shepherd reached his home by traveling up old Brightwood road (now Georgia avenue and turning left up a tree-lined lane that still can be traced just north of Walter Reed. The ornate mansion, which figured prominently in the District's political life during the 70's and which was known as Bleak House, was torn down more than a quarter century ago.

When development of Shepherd Park suburb was begun, following the World War, signs of the home were much in evidence. "We found the location of the old barn and well, and there were stone piles at the entrance gates," Lewis T. Breuninger, realtor, said yesterday.

"Gov. Shepherd selected the site because of its elevation. He built on a knoll overlooking the Rock Creek Valley. His house was at about where Holly and Fourteenth streets intersect today," he said.

The old house still standing at Kalmia and Thirteenth streets was on the estate one removed from Shepherd's and belonged at one time to George B. Abrams, grandfather of George R. Dickson, who lives at 1314 Holly street.

Dickson recalled last night that his grandfather had purchased it from the Lambert family and said that between it and the Shepherd home was the home of the Waters family. Some of the "Shepherd trees" are in Mr. and Mrs. Dickson's yard and the home of their neighbor across the street has some of the "Shepherd bricks" in it.

Old Photograph Shown

Perry Cleveland, who moved to Shepherd Park 20 years ago, has a photograph showing 65 of the first members of the Sixteenth Street Heights Citizens Association.

"Mrs. H. M. Phillips and I are the only ones still living in the area," he said. "Mr. and Mrs. Phillips were living here when I moved. Daniel Roper, later Secretary of Commerce, was one of the charter members.

"His home and many of the other first ones are on streets now inside the Walter Reed reservation. There was nothing on the north side of Alaska avenue at the time, and just a house or two on Fern street."

Mrs. Phillips Active Worker

Mrs. Phillips, whose home is at 1211 Fern street, recently was elected vice president of the Federation of Citizens Associations. She has been active in Sixteenth Street Heights community affairs for a number of years and took a leading part in securing Shepherd School and Northminster Church for the area.

When the citizens began their drive for a school, they were told the school followed the growth of the community. Mrs. Phillips and others insisted it took a school to make a community grow. They obtained portables at first, the location being at Fourteenth and Kalmia, where the brick school is today. Cleveland is given credit for swinging opinion behind location of the school at this central spot when there was talk of putting it down where most of the houses were at that time.

Another old house in the neighborhood, although it has been remodeled, is on the northeast corner of Georgia avenue and Fern street.

"I did the remodeling myself," said Cleveland. "It is one of the old Shoemaker houses. I remember that Shoemaker came around while the work was being done. He said the house had been used by Gen. Early and his soldiers when they marched on Washington. We found names of Confederate soldiers written on the walls.

"He hoped to find a cannon ball, but did not. I have a 25-pound one, however, plowed up out here. We're always finding bullets. The soldiers were all around.

Falkland Name Preserved

Confederate officers tarried so long at Silver Spring, home of Francis Preston Blair, just over the District line, they failed to win a victory next day at Fort Stevens. Before leaving the Blair property, they burned Falkland, home of Montgomery Blair, who was at the time the only Southerner in Lincoln's Cabinet.

The Falkland name is preserved in the large housing development at the end of Sixteenth street, beyond Blair Portal. Houses west of Sixteenth, in the hilly park vicinity, and several on the east side of the street, were built on Blair land. The Lee property is farther east on the District line. Maj. E. Brooke Lee, a great-grandson of Francis Preston Blair, heads the real estate company which holds the wooded and undeveloped section above Locust road.

Officers Are Residents

M. J. Cairns, president of the Sixteenth Street Heights Citizens, lives at 7705 Fourteenth street, while the secretary, G. Mallet Prevost, lives on Locust road—which he terms the choice thoroughfare in the vicinity.

"It's just two blocks long and we have Fernwood drive leading down into the Lee property, which serves us as a park. Kalmia street," he said, "leads all the way into Rock Creek Park and traffic along it is terrific."

To facilitate pedestrian travel into Rock Creek Park, sidewalks are being urged for Kalmia street. Since city streets do not go through the Army reservation, which stretches from Georgia to Sixteenth, residents of Sixteenth Street Heights are "shut off" from the city.

Georgia Avenue Entrance

When Shepherd Park was started Georgia avenue was the entrance, just as it was in Gov. Shepherd's day. The rest could not be developed until Sixteenth came through in recent years and until Alaska was cut crosswise.

"Sixteenth street, of course, was developed a lap at a time. It stopped at Alaska for many years and even now goes only a short way beyond the portal," Breuninger said.

Homes of Sixteenth Street Heights are built on unusually wide lots, and all are in the "upper brackets." The section has grown very rapidly in the past ten years.

Northminster Church, at Alaska and Kalmia, is the only church in the community and—although Presbyterian in name—serves the entire neighborhood. It was moved there from its downtown area, mostly at the insistence of the citizens' association.

Tomorrow—East of the Anacostia River, including Lincoln Park.

Dr. Nolan Hits Light Dope Terms

Heavier Sentences Are Advocated to Break Up Narcotic Peddling in D. C.

The flourishing of dope peddlers in the District, in the face of light sentences, was decried by Dr. James A. Nolan, managing director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, at the meeting of the Society of Natives last night.

"We wanted to find out why there were seven times more dope peddlers in the District than in Philadelphia, and why Washington was reputed to be the best dope city in the East," he said.

The Narcotics Bureau had been unable to make the progress that it should have in the past few years, he said, although it got "the finest of co-operation from the police." But the courts were giving "light sentences to dope peddlers," he pointed out.

5-Year Terms in Baltimore

In Baltimore, he said, five years on each count is in store for a dope peddler, and he is likely to get the same sentence on each count in Richmond. But here "a great many dope peddlers walk out of court, free on probation," Dr. Nolan said.

A sufficient sentence for the narcotics bureau to "break the peddler's connections" is the important thing, he said.

Dr. Nolan pointed out that an increase in housebreaking here sometime ago was thought by the police to be due largely to the increased use of dope among young colored people.

In raids last spring, a number of youngsters, among them two girls under 17, were found to be addicted to dope, he said.

Stratagems Are Used

Narcotics Bureau men use stratagems to get peddlers when they are operating on the other side of the District line in Virginia, for instance, because of the different situation there.

"We have been oversentimental in the last ten years with our prisoners," Dr. Nolan declared. "Our courts must be speeded up. If a person is charged with a serious crime, the case should be disposed of within three weeks, with adequate penalty or treatment meted out.

"Last year, when the white slave trade was found to be bad in the District, a five-year sentence was given in such a case. Word spread in the underworld so that for six months afterward we didn't have a white slave case."

The society, meeting at the Continental Hotel, had a lengthy discussion before voting to change its policy on new members. The new plan, described by its advocates as a way of getting more new and younger members, speeds up the period between proposal of a name and election to membership and permits the waiving of the initiation fee.

Eight new members elected last night were Miss Margaret Hazen Davis, Mrs. Erna Embrey, Henry E. Tripp, James F. O'Donnell Granville Gude, Arthur F. Carroll, jr., Mrs. Louise D. Meigs and Richard D. Daniels. Louis Bowdler, president, was in charge.

Graff Wins Takoma Park Flower Prize

Silver Cup Awarded for 304 Points Scored in Eight Shows in Year

Takoma Park Horticultural Club awarded its silver cup last night to George H. Graff, 242 Peabody street northwest, for scoring the largest number of points in the eight flower shows of the year. He achieved 304 points, receiving more than 100 in the recent dahlia show alone.

Honorable mention for second highest score went to Col. W. H. England, 1344 Iris street northwest, 138 points, and for third highest to W. H. Youngman, of Meadowood, Md., 127 points.

Marion L. Boat was elected president to succeed Clarence W. Moore. Other new officers are Dr. Clarence S. Ross, vice president; Karl Axline, secretary; J. Mark Albertson, treasurer; Dr. Roy Magruder, landscape gardener.

The club voted to contribute $10 to the Takoma Park branch of the Public Library for new books. The meeting last night was held at the branch building. Talks on various flowers were given by Col. England, Walter H. Gannaway, Dr. Ross and Dr. Magruder.

Bandit Pair Gets $193 in Four Holdups

Liquor Stores, Gas Stations Are Victims; Woman Loses $39

Two armed bandits robbed two liquor stores and two gas stations last night and escaped with $193. The holdups took place between 9:30 p. m. and midnight.

Earlier, Mrs. Elizabeth Corder, of 2202 Minnesota avenue southeast, lost $39 to a thief who ransacked her home while her husband slept. The robber dressed himself in a sheet when she entered, seized her pocketbook, threw her to the ground, and escaped through a second-floor window.

One Drawer Empty

The armed robbers started operations at a liquor store at 938 N street northwest, but Proprietor Norman Katz's cash register was empty. He had just paid a large bill. Shortly afterward they got $150 at a liquor store at 1618 Seventeenth street northwest.

Sylvia Katz, 22, a clerk of the same address, and Henry Marraffa, 26, of 1720 Capitol avenue northeast, a customer, were in the store at the time. About $125 was taken from the cash register by one man, while the other seized Marraffa's wallet with about $25 in it.

The next crime occurred at a gas station at Bladensburg road and New York avenue northeast. Elmont Thomas, 43, of 4119 First street southeast, the attendant, was ordered to empty his pockets into his hat by one of the men, while the other kept guard. The haul was $30.

A fourth holdup netted $13 at a gas station at Kennedy and Fifth streets northwest.

Youth Chases Thief

The thief who robbed the Corder home was chased for two blocks by 16-year-old Raymond Corder, who climbed down an iron grating after him. Mrs. Corder's husband, Clarence, slept through it all.

Two men who tried to holdup an ice cream store were captured by Private H. W. Whitlow, of Fifth Precinct, as they ran from the store at 609 Pennsylvania avenue southeast. The men were frightened by the screams of Mrs. Florence Burffot, the clerk. An empty whisky bottle in a coat pocket had served as the "gun."

Harry Berger and his wife, Sarah, were followed from their store at 44 E street northwest early today and robbed of $85 at First and R streets by two armed colored men. Two colored men held up Cab Driver Raymond R. Nicholson, of 768 Eleventh street southeast, at the point of a knife and escaped with $4. Margaret A. Bloomfield, 60, of the Continental Hotel, lost $10 when two colored youths seized her pocketbook near her home.

Special Squad of Detectives Is Created to Hunt Firebug

Two Men Are Sought for Questioning About Seven Fires in Apartment Houses Surrounding Eighteenth and Columbia Road

A special squad of veteran detectives was created yesterday to track down the pyromaniac who set off fires in seven apartment houses in the Kalorama-Mount Pleasant area early Sunday morning.

Intensification of police action came after the seventh suspect, believed to be the "tall, dark" man seen in the vicinity of two fires, was released last night.

Lieut. Clement Cox was named head of the detail. He selected top-ranking plainclothesmen for the squad. The detail will work with fire marshals. Police would not comment on progress except to reveal they were seeking two men for questioning.

More than 200 occupants were routed from their beds when the fires broke out in seven apartment houses within a 3-block radius of Columbia road and Eighteenth street northwest. Twenty-five persons were rescued by firemen in a three-alarm blaze at 2300 Eighteenth street and a two-alarm at 1855 Calvert street northwest.

According to police officials, speedy work on part of the firemen prevented the fires from taking a heavy toll. Three firemen were overcome by smoke, one woman cut her hand, and a second suffered a heart attack.

Phil Furr Wins Decision Over El Brookman

The Washington Post Sports

15,000 D. C. Fans to See Giant-Redskin Tilt

Youngster Wins but Two Of 8 Rounds

Only 664 Pay to See Bout; Judge Schuyler Votes for Brookman; No Knockdowns

By Al Hailey

Phil Furr, former "king" of the District welterweights, proved that his one-time protege, El Brookman, is still bush league material last night in Turner's Arena by pounding out a majority eight-round decision.

It was a bloodless battle touted as a teacher versus pupil affair. But is looked more like an initiation ceremony with 21-year-old Brookman, a Southeast product, as the luckless neophyte.

There were no knockdowns, but Brookman swung with such enthusiasm in the third round that he threw himself to the floor—much to the delight of a small house of 664 paying guests. Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn's gate was $837—only a small amount above that of last week's all-time low, despite the fact that 10 per cent went to the cause of Washington's underprivileged children.

Wins First Two Rounds

Brookman rushed out and won the first two rounds from his veteran Foggy Bottom "teacher," who at 29 is in the midst of a comeback attempt. El obviously was playing out of his league against the experienced Furr and did not win another round after the first two.

The downfall of Brookman began in the late seconds of the second round, when Furr suddenly came to life, planted a hard righthand into El's kidney and then put the same punch into his old pupil's jaw. El was befuddled by this turn of events and fought a haphazard battle the remainder of the fight.

Despite Phil's obvious advantage, Frank Schuyler, a judge, called it a draw—how, nobody knows. Dick Sullivan, the other judge, and Referee Charley Reynolds clearly indicated Furr as the winner.

No Knockdowns

The closest thing to a knockdown came in the sixth round when Furr, cleverly outmaneuvering Brookman, sent a screaming right hand under El's heart that made the latter's knees buckle.

Working with a lightning left jab that even beat Furr's flicking left to the mark, Brookman had Phil's left eye a glowing red in the first round. He caught Phil's offerings nicely on his elbows and gloves until the latter finally decided to get down to business.

In the fourth, after El had flung himself to the canvas in the previous round and bounced up grinning sheepishly, Furr feinted Brookman off balance again. El rushed in, swung and then found himself doing an imitation of a merry-go-round—Phil wasn't there. That is, Phil wasn't there until El turned back around, and ran into a flurry of punches that made him dizzy.

Must Start Over

It was a battle that was to prove whether El, a rapidly rising welter, could ever lay claims to some sort of boxing fame. He showed a dim spark, but if he has the stuff that will take him out of the fog of obscurity he must have left it in some other location last night. Furr weighed 152, Brookman 151½.

In a wild slugging spree that saw first one and then the other dizzy, Joey Spangler, 151½, of Richmond, managed to outlast and outpunch Dick O'Leary, of Baltimore, for a unanimous six-round decision.

Twice Spangler fell to the floor from the force of his own swings. He took two terrific low blows early in the fight, backed up a few moments and then came back with a two-handed attack which kept the crowd howling. He opened a small cut over O'Leary's right eye in the second round.

Buddy Thomas, 164, of Washington, took a unanimous four-round decision over Nick Mafredo, 158, of Baltimore. William Moore, colored Washington lightweight, knocked out George Williams, 124½, of Baltimore, in 40 seconds of the third round of their four-round opener, and Buddy Holmes, 156½, colored Washingtonian, dropped a four-round decision to Tommy Mollis, 151½, of Baltimore.

Nile Kinnick 'Outstanding' Big 10 Back

Iowa's Ace Is Only Unanimous Choice On Conference Team

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 27.—Nile Clark Kinnick, jr., superb triple-threat back and spark of the Iowa eleven, was the Western Conference's outstanding individual player of the season and you have the Big Ten coaches' word for it.

Kinnick, cast in an "iron-man" role on Iowa's undermanned eleven, was the only unanimous selection of the coaches on the annual Associated Press All-Conference team.

Of the five players making the All-Star team a year ago who were still in competition, only two repeated on the first team. Erwin Prasse, Iowa end, was picked for an end spot and Tommy Harmon, Michigan ace, for the halfback opposite Kinnick.

Forest Evashevski, Michigan's blocking back who was hampered by injuries, dropped to the second team, and John Murray, Wisconsin center, and Lou Brock, Purdue back,

Brookman's Right Knocks Furr Off Balance

Just before the tide of battle turned Phil Furr's way last night in Turner's Arena, El Brookman managed to put him off balance with this right in the second round. From this point on it was Furr's fight. He won eight-rounder

Redskins Figure In Eastern Title Play for Fourth Consecutive Year

The greatest exodus of fans in Washington history will descend on New York and the Polo Grounds on Sunday for the football battle between the Redskins and the Giants, it was estimated by railroad officials and Redskins headquarters yesterday.

Twelve thousand five hundred tickets to the game are known to be in the hands of Washington fans. General Manager Jack Espy, of the Redskins, declared, with thousands as yet unable to attain the coveted admissions.

"Eighty-five hundred tickets have been sold by the Redskins' office," said Espey, "and 4,000 seats to the game have been distributed by the railroad companies, who are running special trains to New York over the week-end. Several thousand tickets have been obtained by Washington fans direct from the Giants' offices, and we estimate that no less than 15,000 Washingtonians will be in the park on Sunday."

The last remaining tickets made available to the Redskins were placed on sale yesterday morning and quickly sold. Hundreds of fans were turned away empty-handed.

Washington needed only the spectacular 31-7 triumph of the Redskins over Detroit last Sunday to produce a mild delirium over the forthcoming battle with the Giants for the Eastern Division championship. Thousands of reservations for that game already had been made, but the Redskins' victory over the Lions has been a potent stimulation to interest.

May Move Title Game

At New York on Sunday, the Redskins will be figuring in the Eastern Division championship game for the fourth successive year. In 1936 they beat the Giants for the title, only to lose the league championship to Green Bay in the East-West playoff. In 1937 they overwhelmed the Giants and went on to beat the Bears for the league title. Last season they lost a decisive 36-0 game to the Giants.

Today at a league meeting at Pittsburgh, the Redskins will attempt to make arrangements to move the league playoff game to Washington in the event that the Redskins and Green Bay emerge as the divisional winners. It is the West's turn to stage the playoff, but the Redskins will point out the modest seating capacity of the Green Bay stadium and the uncertainty of the weather in the West compared to the mildness in Washington. In 1937 only 19,000 saw the playoff game between the Redskins and the Bears.

Despite numerous injuries in the Lions' game, the Redskins will be at peak strength against the Giants. Turk Edwards suffered a slightly sprained ankle, Andy Farkas and Charlie Malone aggravated "charlie horses" in their legs, Clem Stralka suffered a bruised hip and Mickey Parks received a knee injury, but Coach Flaherty reported yesterday that all would be available for Sunday's game.

Teams Even Money

Until the Redskins dispatched the Lions so completely, the Giants were betting favorites to beat the Washington team, but there is an absence of odds-giving as the game approaches. The two teams played to a scoreless tie in Washington in the opening game of the season, on a muddy field.

Coach Ray Flaherty has a wholesome respect for the Giants who, like the Redskins, have been opportunists all season, capitalizing on the breaks they get. With Ed Danowski to throw the Giants' passes and Tuffy Leemans to lead their running game, the Giants have twin backfield threats in addition to the field-goal kicking talents of Ward Cuff and Ken Strong.

The Redskins announced yesterday that Ernie Pinckert had signed a contract to play in 1940, thus nailing the report that he would retire to his sporting goods business on the Pacific Coast. Pinckert is the first Redskin to sign for next season.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Down the stretch at Bowie they came yesterday, with the long-shot players in full-throated cry as Little Mowlee, an 8 to 1 shot, hugged the rail with a two-length lead. Less excited, in fact smugly complacent, were the customers with tickets on the two favorites. They knew about Little Mowlee.

POVICH

They knew him as a quitter, and the favorites were running two-three. Six times the little brown gelding had gone to the post before. He had early foot, but in the stretch he had always chucked it. In the prerace selections, the newspaper handicappers had labeled him "quitter." Last week in a 5½-furlong sprint he was leading in the stretch and flattened out to finish a tiring third.

But yesterday, Little Mowlee didn't quit. The two lengths lead that he held at the furlong pole was expanded to three lengths when he reached the finish line. Little Mowlee had stuck it out and finished with speed in reserve, according to the chart makers. This was the day they couldn't catch him.

Willie Has Spent Lifetime in Saddle

But this isn't a story of Little Mowlee. It's the story of the "boy" who was on his back and we are using the quotes advisedly. Around the tracks they call 'em all boys. That's their name for anybody who dons silks and swings a leg up on a horse. But the "boy" who had the mount on Little Mowlee was no boy. He was Willie Obert, age unknown, but old enough to be a grandfather.

Around the race tracks they joke about Willie Obert. They'll laugh and tell you that the wizened little fellow who admits to riding his first winner in 1906, was the saddle boy for Paul Revere. Or that he had a leg up on the wooden horse of Troy. Walter Haight, The Post's turf handicapper, has evidence that Obert rode a winner at New Orleans in 1901.

The mystery of Willie Obert's age is high good fun around the race tracks. They never could get the old fellow to admit to more than 45, but when he says that, they smirk. This much is known: Willie Obert has spent a lifetime in the saddle.

The mounts come few and far between for the old fellow now. He was saying yesterday that he guessed he had ridden only about seven races this year. He has been moving mostly about the half-mile tracks where he doesn't have to contend with the stylish jockeys. When he popped up at Bowie yesterday astride Little Mowlee there was more than a little amazement among the fans. What was old Willie Obert doing on a mile track?

Obert Worked Hard to Get Job

There isn't much doubt that old Bill was one of the reasons that Little Mowlee was as much as 8 to 1 in a field of maidens. At the big tracks, they don't hold him in very high regard now as a jockey. They say he hasn't the strength to be of help to a horse in those last punishing furlongs when strong arms are needed to keep a horse's head up and buck a tendency to quit.

It wasn't any coincidence, though, that Old Willie was riding Little Mowlee. He had worked hard to get that job and the ten bucks it would earn him. Also there would be that $25 fee he could claim if his mount won. For a couple of weeks he had been getting up before dawn to gallop Little Mowlee in the morning at $1 per gallop. He told Trainer Dick Pending he thought he could win with the horse if they'd let him ride.

Under Old Willie, Little Mowlee didn't quit. He went all the way, and Willie was saying after the race that it wasn't much of a trick to get the horse home. "I let him go as long as he was full of run. The trick was to know when he wanted to chuck it. I felt him thinking along those lines at the three-sixteenths pole and I went to the whip. That shook him up and he went all the way."

Willie wasn't always riding for the $25 that goes to a winning jockey on the big tracks of the $15 fees he picks up for riding a half-mile winner. He came back to the winner's circle once to collect a $4,000 salary for riding one race. That was the Kentucky Oaks of 1914 when he got Bronze Wing home by a neck.

Still Makes Weight Without Trouble

Those were the days when Willie Obert was a contract rider for the big stables, his services sought by the racing magnates of the United States and Canada. He took a whirl, too, at riding in Rio de Janeiro and Chile, but they paid the jockeys better in America.

Whatever his age may be, he still has no trouble making the weight. Yesterday he rode at 111 pounds and there were a few pounds of lead in the saddle to bring him up to that figure. Perhaps the fact that he has eaten no meat for the past five years is one factor in his favor. But Willie is no vegetarian. Two broken jaws are the reasons he now eats no meat. Those cracked jaws are only a few of his race-riding souvenirs. In his falls, he has broken more ribs than there are in a body, and both of his arms and legs bear the evidence of fractures.

He's old enough to be the grandfather of the lads he rides against. But there's nothing old-fashioned about Willie Obert. He thinks the new-fangled starting gates are better than anything they ever had in the old days. He thinks there were more good jockeys riding when he was a lad than are now in the saddle, but he doesn't want to say anything against modern jockeys. "I'm still riding with these boys, and they may not like it," says Willie. "Just say the old-time jockeys were great judges of pace."

Elmer Ripley Preps Hoyas For Baltimore

Sophs and Juniors To Be Mainstay of Georgetown Team

The Georgetown University basketball team has returned to practice after the holiday yesterday and speeded up preparations for its season's debut at Baltimore University Sunday night.

Under the direction of Elmer (Rip) Ripley, the Hoya courtmen were cochampions last year in the Eastern Intercollegiate Conference which is now disbanded.

Missing several 1938 standouts, notably Ed Kurtyka, Joe Murphy, Jack Riches and Johnny McGowan, Georgetown is building its current team around three lettermen. They are Johnny Schmidt, a fast and clever senior guard, and Irving Rizzi and George Pajaz, a pair of promising juniors.

Figuring prominently in Ripley's plans for the 1939-40 season are several stars up from last year's powerful freshman club, including Jim Giebel, former All-City center, of St. John's, and Buddy O'Grady, Russ Miller, guards, and Don Martin and Dick Deckelman, forwards.

Other players who are scheduled to make the trip to Baltimore Sunday night are Jim McKay and Frank Prial, forwards, and Carl Routa, guard.

10,000 Entries Delay Contest Awards

Post's Guests at the Redskin-Giant Game To Be Announced Tomorrow Morning; One Contestant Leads With Three Games Wrong

Swamped, buried under an avalanche of more than 10,000 entries—that's a small idea of the situation at The Washington Post's football contest headquarters this week.

It looks as if everybody wants to go to New York Sunday to see the Washington Redskins play the Giants for the National Professional Football League's Eastern Division championship.

Because of that fact, The Post is asking your indulgence for one day. The record number of entries makes it necessary to delay announcement of the winners until tomorrow.

Special workers were recruited when the deadline for receipt of entries passed Sunday at 5 p. m.

Needless to say The Post is highly appreciative of the overwhelming response to the grand finals of its grid selecting contest. Thousands have tried their skill at prognostication each week, with free tickets to local college and pro games as their goal.

As the situation stands now in the running for a free trip to New York and ten choice seats to the Redskin game, the leading entry has only three games picked incorrectly out of the 19 listed.

Three contestants have made only four mistakes in naming the winner, while 12 have but five errors. But this check is only on the basis of winners. When the remainder of the entries are checked for most winners correct, the serious business of getting down to who has the most nearly correct number of actual scores comes up.

That is when the true test of skill starts, and that is what will tell the tale of success for five prognosticators.

Naismith, Inventor Of Basketball, Near Death

Lawrence, Kans., Nov. 27 (U.P.).—A weakened heart of Dr. James A. Naismith, inventor of basketball, beat irregularly tonight and physicians feared he would die at any time. Naismith, 78, and professor emeritus of physical education at the University of Kansas, suffered a cerebral hemorrhage November 19.

Armstrong, Ambers Bout Postponed

Champion, Ill With Cold, Can't Fight Friday, Manager Says

By the United Press

New York, Nov. 27.—The Armstrong-Ambers welterweight title fight, scheduled for Friday night at Madison Square Garden, will be postponed or cancelled tomorrow because Champion Armstrong is in bed with a bad cold.

Promoter Mike Jacobs will substitute Friday night a ten-round main event between Young Ali Stolz, of Newark, N. J., and Petey Scalzo, of New York. Stolz is one of the country's outstanding light weight contenders and Scalzo is the outstanding American featherweight challenger. The rest of the card will remain unchanged.

Henry Armstrong, the bull-shouldered little Los Angeles Negro who has fought lightweight king Lou Ambers twice before, quit training and took to his bed today. His manager, Eddie Mead, announced tonight. "Henry's condition is so bad that I am calling off the fight. I won't let him go through with it, regardless of what the boxing commission physicians say. He won't be able to fight Ambers until January."

When Armstrong's condition was revealed today the boxing commission immediately sent three physicians to examine him. They will make their report at tomorrow's commission meeting. Promoter Jacobs was still hopeful tonight that their report might be favorable and that Armstrong could go through with the bout but Mead declared, "There isn't a chance in the world."

Armstrong's illness brought gloom to the Twentieth Century Club, where Promoter Jacobs said the advance sale virtually had assured the Armstrong-Ambers tilt of being a $91,000 sellout. Ticket prices will be cut in half for the Scalzo-Stolz 10-rounder, which originally was scheduled for December 22.

Meanwhile Ambers' manager, Al Weill, charged that Armstrong "isn't ill at all. He's just takin' a run-out powder. He knows he'll get licked if he fights Ambers Friday night." Weill added that if the commission permits a postponement, he will insist that it be only until December 15, "or else Ambers won't fight him at all."

Whiteman Elected Yale Grid Captain

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 27 (U.P.).—Harold Bartlett Whiteman, jr., of Nashville, Tenn., a left halfback, today was unanimously chosen captain of Yale's 1940 football team.

Whiteman, 19, is one of the youngest of Yale's captains. A 6-footer, weighing 185 pounds, he is a junior, who prepped at Taft School, Waterbury, Conn., played on Yale's freshman team and won his letter as a blocking back last year.

Ceferino Garcia, Glenn Lee Visit President Quezon

Manila, Nov. 27 (A.P.).—Glenn Lee, of Nebraska, who will attempt to take the middleweight boxing title from Ceferino Garcia here December 16, arrived today on the steamship President Taft while Filipinos were acclaiming Garcia as a national hero.

Garcia, who arrived earlier in the day on the President Adams, and Lee visited President Manuel Quezon. Asked how long he intended remaining in the islands, Lee provoked a good-natured presidential laugh by replying "Oh, long enough to take the title back to the States."

Garcia's title of middleweight champion of the world is recognized in New York and California. Jack Dempsey will referee the fight.

Clemson Is Added To Auburn Card

Auburn, Ala., Nov. 27 (A.P.).—Clemson, co-champion of the Southern Conference this year, was added today to Auburn's 1940 football schedule, replacing Villanova.

Coach Jack Meagher announced the game would be played in Auburn November 9.

This will be the first clash between the two teams, arch rivals in the old Southern Conference, since Clemson's 26-7 win in 1929.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 27.—We tried to see Don Herring for you, down at Princeton the other day. But at the hospital they said they were sorry. They have had to limit his visitors to his family and a few close friends.

The boy who lost his leg in the Brown game is reported by his friends to be resigned to his fate and in good spirits. His parents, and the boy himself, are still amazed at the national interest in his case. The old man wept when—a few hours after the announcement that the leg would have to be amputated—telegrams and phone calls began to bombard the hospital. They came from people he had never heard of, from coast to coast, offering the services of their favorite physicians, recommending a score of "cures," or just asking if there was anything they could do.

CONSIDINE

Averages 50 Letters Per Day

Don still averages about 50 letters a day, many of them from persons with artificial limbs. All of them are encouraging, kindly, human. He is trying to answer all of them, but has fallen hundreds of letters behind. The report around Princeton is that the school will send to Germany, where incredible things are being done in this line, for the artificial leg on which Herring some day will take up his profession of geology.

He probably will have to forfeit this school year, for he hasn't been able to study since the accident. However, he'll stay at Princeton until he gets his degree.

The hospital has had to put in strict rules to deflect the flow of people who want to get in to see Herring. Most of the would-be visitors are motivated by pure sympathy of course. But a few brassy folk, as usual, have tried to barge in for one reason or another. A typical mother-with-a-marriageable-daughter combination swooped in the other day and sent word up that they wanted to see him. Herring had never heard of them, nor had Mrs. Herring, who has the tough job of selecting those who get in and those who don't. The mother-daughter combination, after failing to convince Mrs. Herring that she knew them, stomped off in a pet.

We don't pick All America teams, for the simple-witted reason that, like most of the other pickers, we see only a pale proportion of the eligible players. But if we picked one this year we'd put Herring on there at tackle. He was good. And could take it. You can't ask anything more of a fellow.

9,000 Tickets Sold in District

They are not saying so, but Jim Crowley and Mal Stevens are pretty sore at Red Blaik and the rest of the Dartmouth athletic office for scheduling the Dartmouth-Stanford game in New York within brassie shot distance of the traditional Fordham-N. Y. U. game. Mel saw Blaik recently and said, archly, "Hello, Red, I guess we'll be seeing a lot of you sometime next season. You know, Crowley and I have decided that the best place to play our 1940 game is in Hanover."

To speak of the Redskins, they will cause one of the greatest mass exoduses in sports history next Sunday when they come up here to play the Giants for the championship of the Eastern half of the pro league. Some 9,000 tickets to the Polo Grounds have already been sold in Washington and Tim Mara has called a halt in order to save some for his own clients. The Washingtonians will come in a dozen special trains, by plane, car, bus and thumb, and parade from Penn station to Columbus circle behind the 90-piece Redskin band. They wear red feathers in their hats, sing the Redskin anthem, and are the greatest goal-post puller-downers in history.

George Marshall, who owns the Reds, may have something—when he says that the only trouble with college football is that it has no spirit.

Death Cheats Life Term for Former Ohio Baseball Star

Freeport, Ill., Nov. 27 (A.P.).—Frank W. Harris, 81, a member of the Canton, Ohio, Terriers in 1889 when that team won the Central League baseball championship, died at the East Moline State Hospital yesterday.

A native of Pittsburgh, Harris came to Freeport in 1890. In 1895, he was convicted of murdering Charles Bengel, of Freeport. He contended Bengel had insulted his wife. He was sentenced to be hanged for the murder, but his sentence was commuted by Gov. Altgeld. Harris served in the Joliet penitentiary until 1911 when he returned to Freeport.

Virginia A.A.U. Names Committees

Roanoke, Va., Nov. 27 (A.P.).—State A. A. U. committee chairman appointments were announced here today by K. Mark Cowen, president. Conspicuously absent from the list was a boxing committeeman, since the association, at its recent convention at Richmond, withdrew from boxing.

The appointments were agreed upon at a State executive committee meeting in Richmond Saturday. They are as follows:

Glenn F. Thistlethwaite, University of Richmond, track and field; J. Houska, Richmond, handball; Miss Mary Castara, Richmond, Y. W. C. A., women's swimming; Carl Ingle, Richmond, men's swimming; C. H. Powell, Norfolk, basketball; Capt. M. G. Ramey, intramural athletic director at V. M. I., volleyball; Dr. H. S. James, Winchester, weight lifting; W. A. Bryson, Richmond, horseshoes; Allen Heil, Danville, playgrounds; William G. Horton, Richmond, records; Dr. W. H. Parker, Richmond, membership; E. Tucker Carlton, Richmond, finance, and J. E. Becher, Richmond, registration.

Navy 'B' Squad Uses Army Names and Jerseys in Practice

Middies and Cadets Post Usual Wagers On Service Clash Outcome Saturday

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 27.—With no further obstacle in its way, the Navy started on its final preparations this afternoon for its climactic struggle with its service rival in Philadelphia, Saturday. The game of this year stands by itself in the fact that both Army and Navy will meet without having won from an important opponent.

The Navy finds its chief Army threat this year in John Hatch, sophomore Army back who stands 6 feet and 2 inches and who has been compared in passing ability with John Allerdice, of Princeton, who hurled to the Navy's undoing Saturday.

B Squad Is "Army"

As the members of Squad B appeared this afternoon in Army jerseys and with names of Army players labeled across their chests, Lowell Savage, who has done some good passing this season for the undefeated B Squad, carried the name of "Hatch," and threw several passes across the varsity line. Claude Shaw took the part of Art Frontczak, and Charley Durfee that of Jere Maupin.

Pat Gray, blocking back who has been out of the game for a week, was on the field briefly this afternoon but found it impossible to run and retired. His playing Saturday is doubtful. However, Hal Harwood, who started the season at center, and Ralph Boyer, another blocking back, both of whom had been on the injured list, were back on the field today.

The three casuals of Saturday's game, Cliff Lenz, 200-pound back; Bex Trimble, right tackle, and Joe Sliwka, left guard, were all on the field this afternoon, though Trimble was the only one who did not show signs of his injury.

Robes Are Wagered

Individual bets of sweaters, bath robes, cuff links and the like, the limit in that line which the authorities permit, are being arranged between Middies and Cadets. The opposing captains, Al Bergner, at the Navy, and Harry Stella, at West Point, both of whom are from Kankakee, Ill., have led the way, Bergner putting two bath robes against an Army sweater.

With Pat Gray on the injured list, Ed Gillette is almost certain to be in the blocking position in the backfield, but there is a wide choice as to the other places. Outstanding as ball carriers if physically able, are Doc Wood, Cliff Lenz, Lou Mayo, Dick Shafer, Wes Gebert and Sammy Boothe, while the only successful passers up to this time have been Tom Blount and Bob Leonard. For the fourth position, the choice lies between Monty Whitehead and Ev Malcolm.

Army Eleven Works Against Navy Passing

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 27 (AP).—Army's football team really got down to brass tacks today as the final week of practice for the Navy game began with a long defensive drill against Navy's passing attack. The Cadet backs faced every Navy passing formation the coaches had been able to show the junior varsity. Coach Bill Wood reported the team was in excellent physical condition.

While no changes in the lineup are definitely scheduled, Wood is considering Carl Helmstetter for right end in place of Emory Adams.

Thomas 'Fake' Fight Charge Will Be Aired

Schmeling, Galento Invited to Attend Hearing Dec. 11

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 27.—The Illinois State Athletic Commission decided today to hold a public hearing December 11 to sift charges made by Harry Thomas that he engaged in fake fights with Tony Galento and Max Schmeling.

The commission invited Galento and Schmeling, as well as their manager, Joe Jacobs, of New York, and Nate Lewis, of Chicago, manager of Thomas, to attend. The seconds of the boxers, judges, referees and the promoters of the two contests, which were held in New York and Philadelphia, also were invited to the hearing.

Thomas will be requested to explain the confession published in the Chicago Tribune in which he claimed he "laid down" in his fights with Schmeling and Galento. However, Thomas refused to testify at a hearing before the New York State Athletic Commission a week ago on the plea that he did not want to "degrade" himself.

If Thomas refuses to attend the Illinois hearing or to testify before the commission, Chairman Joseph Triner said he did not believe the commission had the authority to force him to do so.

Herman Taylor was promoter of the Philadelphia match between Thomas and Galento, while Mike Jacobs promoted the Schmeling-Thomas match in New York.

Cornell 'Positively' Through for Season

Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 27 (INS).—Rumors that Cornell University's unbeaten and untied eleven might accept a Rose Bowl bid if offered were scotched tonight when James Lynah, director of athletics, said that the Big Red had a ruling against postseason games.

"Cornell will not play in any postseason game," declared Lynah. "This is definite and final."

M. 'Bucky' Morse, Virginia Gridder, Is a One-Man Team

By the Associated Press

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 27.—Mason (Bucky) Morse, 188-pound junior letterman at the University of Virginia, is almost a one-man football team.

Already this season the Washington, D. C., youth has played right and left tackle posts, center and blocking back, being called upon to back up both sides of the line as well as shift to a defensive halfback and help with the punting.

Officials were befuddled when he caught a touchdown pass against the Navy, but it was okay, a checkup showing that he was playing fullback at the time.

He will start at center against North Carolina Thursday, but the coaches would like to have him free to take over right tackle.

Resignation Of Dobson Now 'Official'

Maryland Athletic Board Makes Announcement; No Successor Chosen

The University of Maryland board of athletic control yesterday announced its formal acceptance of the resignation of Frank M. Dobson as head coach of football..

Dobson's resignation, submitted on the heels of persistent rumors that Dick Harlow would succeed him as coach next year, was accepted after a short hearing.

The board of athletic control, consisting of Geory P. Eppley, director of athletics, and faculty members, Drs. W. B. Kemp, E. N. Cory, W. C. Supplee and L. B Broughton, stated that no successor has yet been named Rumors that Al Wood, present freshman coach of football at Maryland, would be promoted to the vacancy were given little credence by those close to the situation..

It is generally understood that Dobson's successor will come from without College Park.

McCoy and Lenihan Added to Mat Card

Bibber McCoy and George Lenihan, two of the rare old exponents of ringside riots, have been added to the wrestling exhibition featuring Abie Coleman and Joe Cox Thursday night in Turner's Arena.

Both gentlemen have been called back after an absence of several months to offset the sudden oversupply of "gentlemen." Promoter Joe Turner insists, because gentlemen wrestlers do not draw crowds.

In a PRIVATE POLL of Public Opinion
the vote was 9 to 1
that Nu-BLUE SUNOCO equals or excels premium-priced gasolines, in road performance!

Tested for more than 250,000 miles in actual road performance, not against ordinary gasolines, but against premium-priced gasolines by 1475 motorists in fourteen cities.

Recently, 1475 users of premium-priced gasolines were asked to test an unidentified, colorless gasoline which was really Nu-Blue Sunoco with the coloring left out. From Florida to Canada, these tests were conducted, not by us, but by independent, unbiased research authorities, and when the returns were summarized, it was found that these motorists voted 9 to 1 in favor of Nu-Blue Sunoco!

9 out of 10 proclaimed it equal or superior to the premium-priced gasolines in road performance.

To make a fair test, don't dilute Nu-Blue Sunoco with other gasoline. Let your tank run practically empty. Then put in Nu-Blue Sunoco. Compare it particularly with premium-priced gasolines. We'll rest our case on your findings.

Early Morn, at $2.80, Wins Sixth Straight in Bowie Feature

Obert, Oldest Jockey, Boots Little Mowlee Home to Pay $18.40; Double Pays $109.80

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent.

Bowie, Md., Nov. 27.—The Tall Tree's Stable's Early Morn, an appropriately named daughter of Milkman and Timely, turned in her sixth straight victory of the Maryland fall season today. Carrying the colors of Mrs. Frank Navin, widow of the late president of the Detroit Tigers, Early Morn merely galloped along in front of her field and won by six lengths in the fifth race, named the Dancing Point Purse. Her victory was anticipated for none of her other five victories was close and she paid a $2.80 mutuel, shortest winning price of the meeting to date.

In a tussle for second money, Tommy Powell's Weekly Stipend held a half length advantage over J. B. Patridge's Moonfolly. Those left up on the race track were Argella, representing H. Neusteter; Carence, owned by Mrs. W. Plunket Stewart and Evening Light, the property of J. M. Welch.

Early Morn showed a liking for the condition today and turned in excellent time of 1:12 3-5 over a fast track. The weather was tops for racing and a crowd of 6,000 reported for the action.

Jockey Willie Obert, the oldest active jockey in America, came on the track for pay competition for the first time at the meeting and won in good style with Little Mowlee, bred and raised by Alan Clarke, ded virtually all the way and closed ahead of Windsor Chief and Tell Me. The winner paid $18.40 and began a pay-off of $109.80 in the daily double.

L. E. Ogle's Knights Sox, paying $11.10, won the second race. The Bright Knight colt withstood a closing bid of White Eye. Sir Khayyam took down third money in the limit field of a dozen claiming routers.

TRANSMITTER, first away, was steadied along while setting the pace, responded boldly to a drive after losing command briefly approaching the stretch and drew out to win easily. GRIDINE, closest to pace from the start, moved up leaving the backstretch and was held safe. UPSTREAM rallied mildly after dropping far out of it.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:23½. Off at 4:24½. Winner, J. E. Murphy's ch. f. (3), by Ladkin—Palmyra. Time, 1:51⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PALKIN, $20.60, $9.60, $6.00; BRAVING DANGER, $8.50, $4.80; PART ONE, $3.00.

PALKIN, going in her best form, took command at once, was rated when ANN MOWLEE was sent to the front, came with good energy when placed to a drive and drew out to win easily. BRAVING DANGER, slowest to begin, improved his position gradually on the outside and closed gamely, but could not menace the winner seriously. PART ONE rallied mildly in the stretch run.

SELECTIONS AT BOWIE.

Dear Al:

Excuses have been made for both ends of the Dixiana entry in last Saturday's Endurance. Faymar suffered cuts on the leg going to the first turn which accounts for his being pulled up. Trainer Jimmy Smith says he is awaiting the advice of a vet as to what to do with the colt. However, Faymar is through definitely for this year. Joe Renick, who rode the Dixiana's Sirocco, said that his mount did not like the track. My guess is that J. Yancey Christmas' Rough Pass has had too much of it. This colt might have been knocked out in that race behind Bimelech at Pimlico. Jockey Don Meade failed to report for his mounts today. He was hit with a stone and he has a bad cold were two reports I got on him. But it may be for another reason. Eddie Brennan, an official at Pimlico, denies the report that horses will not be allowed to winter at the Maryland Jockey Club's track. He says that horsemen should file requests with General Manager Matt Daiger. Dynamite Kerr is taking seven horses to Charles Town including Dizzy Dame. Dr. J. Fred Adams reports that his mare, Miss Mac, lost a colt foal by Rehoboth. Although he will race most of his horses at New Orleans, Trainer Sammy Hicks has named D. J. Sullivan's Philosopher for the Flamingo Stakes at Hialeah. Mike Caffarella had piloted 12 winners going into yesterday's program, five more than Lester Balaski, his nearest rival. Maxwell Howard, who purchased Victory Morn at the Ral Parr dispersal sale, will race the colt in Florida this winter. Frank Cronan, the "Voice of Charles Town," will be in charge of the public address system at the West Virginia track. Mookie Glassman and his crew also will take in the two weeks of sport. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—White Hope raced this distance in fair time when beaten three lengths at Empire City a month ago. At the weights, she figures to have a slight edge over these maidens. Eight Rolls has raced well in local maiden races and should be the one to beat. Career Girl can better her last race.

Second race—Miss Ponne has shown a liking for the Bowie strip and her second to Cisneros opening day indicates that she is capable of whipping this sort. Cerisse III finished second to Golden Vein Saturday and receives a good figure off that race. Whitheraway is better than indicated in his last race.

Third race—True Knightess has been knocking on the door in late trials and meets a field of juveniles beneath her class. Mistletoe showed good speed in her recent Pimlico race and was a winner at Laurel. Gayova has won over this track and, though she steps up, she must be considered.

Fourth race—Liberty Flight could not find racing room to display his true ability behind Rough Time in the handicap opening day. He competes in a cheaper field today and with the right ride,

President Remon Presents Trophies At Banquet; Next Meeting in New York

Motorboat champions of 1939 were toasted last night as the American Power Boat Association awarded gold medals to 33 drivers who set 42 records in the past year at the November meeting of the council in the Shoreham Hotel.

Members and officials of the President's Cup Regatta Association—power boat and sailing enthusiasts alike—joined in a gala banquet and dance following the meeting, at which President John A. Remon presented the awards and announced committee appointments for 1940.

Charles F. Chapman, of New York, a motorboat racing enthusiast for 26 years, was renamed to the racing commission of the A. P. B. A.

Zalmon C. Simmons, who set a 90-mile competitive record in the Gold Cup race at Detroit in September; Gar Wood, jr., Fred Jacoby, jr., and Clint Ferguson, who established outboard class records; Andy Crawford, Jack Hyde, of Washington, and Jack Cooper, inboard record breakers, headed a notable list of drivers.

Three Washington newspapermen, Bernie Harter, of the Times-Herald; Malcolm Lambourne, jr., of the Star, and Ken Harter, of The Washington Post, were elected honorary vice presidents of the A. P. B. A. The A. P. B. A. will hold its next meeting in New York during the motorboat show January 11-15. The February meeting will be held at Palm Beach, Fla.

Here's Story That'll Match Fairybook Tale

For sheer tenacity and spunk, bowlers all over town are awarding the palm to Mrs. Jessie Sacrey, star roller of the Ice Palace ladies' team in the District League, especially after her recent brilliant performance which reads like a story book.

Mrs. Sacrey disregarded a series of misfortunes that would have stopped a less hardy person to lead the Ice Palace girls in their recent 2-1 victory over Arcade-Pontiac, the victory moving the Palace girls up to fourth place in the District loop.

First of all, en route to the match, Mrs. Sacrey's auto crashed with another. In the car with her were her husband, Charles Sacrey; her mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. G. (Pop) Carleton, of 1110 F street northwest, and a friend.

The crash resulted in a badly

sprained hand for her husband; a nasty bump on the head for her mother; a general shaking up of her father and a bad head bump and a strained arm and shoulder for herself. The friend escaped damage.

Despite the crash and injuries which could have proven serious, Mrs. Sacrey and her husband and parents insisted on continuing to the bowling alleys and reported a little late. Despite a throbbing left shoulder and arm and a severe headache from the head bump, Mrs. Sacrey took her place in the line-up.

Just about the time she was scheduled to deliver the first ball the nervous reaction was too much for her mother, for whom medical attention was summoned. First aid was immediately administered.

All the while the match was going on.

And, like the story book tale, Mrs. Sacrey was the star, contributing a 328 set in the 2-1 triumph of Ice Palace, shooting a brilliant 132 game which single-handedly won the second game and evened the match at the time, and carried on in courageous style to help her teammates follow through to win the third and odd game for the Palace lassies. Her 132 game also helped Ice Palace roll high game of the night, 605.

Chicago Bears Lead Pros In Scoring, Ground Gaining

Ground gaining and scoring records for the National League have been shattered by the Redskins this season, but strangely they are not the leading offensive club in the league. That honor belongs to the Chicago Bears, who broke the same records by even a greater margin than the Washington team.

Ending their season on Sunday with 3,988 yards gained, the Bears broke the former record of 3,201. The Redskins also have broken the record for yards gained, with 3,228, but with only one more game to play have little chance to surpass the Bears' new mark.

The Redskins, like the Bears, also wiped out the previous league scoring record for a season's play, but the Bears with their 298 points have outscored the Redskins by 63.

In the East, the Redskins have a clear-cut lead in yards gained, least yards yielded opponents, forward passing efficiency and points scored. Cleveland, Philadelphia and Washington are waging the closest fight in league annals for the forward passing championship. Cleveland and Philadelphia have 107 completions each for 48 and 44 per cent efficiency, respectively. Washington has 103 completions for 59 per cent, which is 11 per cent ahead of the league mark compiled by New York a year ago, and a mark which will become official after its final game next Sunday. New York and Washington have held opponents to 78 and 85 points and 2,278 and 1,952 yards, respectively, for the best defensive records.

Scott to Sub For Vernon

William A. Scott, of Police Boys Club No. 5, will be substituted for Reds Vernon, classy young amateur fighter, on the District A. A. U.'s third tournament card Friday night in Turner's Arena.

Scott will take on Joe Pavone, undefeated member of the St Mary's Boys Club team, in the 126-pound novice class. Pavone is the younger brother of Lou Pavone, whom Gene Tunney last summer described as one of the most polished amateur fighters he had ever seen.

The bout expected to steal the show for action Friday, however, will pit Ray Landis, Phil Furr's protege, against Kenny Swann, who knocked out his opponent last week in the arena.

They will meet in the 135-pound novice quarterfinals. Landis made his first appearance in the tourney last week with an impressive victory over George Stimeyer, of No. 10.

In the 147-pound senior division, Frank McCaleb, another undefeated St. Mary's product, will be substituted for R. W. Williams

Delhuds Win Initial Amateur Court Game

Beat Regal Clothiers, 34-27, in Heurich League Opener

Amateur basketball was formally ushered into Washington last night at the Heurich gym with Delaware-Hudson beating Regal Clothiers, 34-27, in the opening game of the Heurich Amateur Basketball League.

The Delhuds, defending champions, were making the first defense of their crown acquired last year, and led by Acky Vlana, sharpshooting guard, were successful in their first attempt.

Delaware-Hudson acquired a 22-7 lead at the end of the first half and staved off a last-half rally by Regal to come in on the long end of the score. Viana scored 12 points while his nearest competitor for scoring honors was Eddie Follard, who counted eight markers. Charley McVean paced the losers with seven points.

In the second game of the evening's entertainment the Jewish Community Center outplayed the Strickland Capitolians in an exceedingly rough game. Jewish Community Center finally won out, 37 to 23.

Pacing the scoring for the Center was Al Scheinerman and Hal Ifshin, both of whom scored 10 points. Buddy Shaner was outstanding for the Capitolians, tallying 8 points.

United Typewriters, the other finalist last year, displayed remarkable power in crushing a weak Bantam Press five, 67 to 28, in the opening game. Ollie Tipton, former Central High ace, led the scoring with 16 points.

18 Games for C. U. Cagers

Catholic University's basketball team will play 18 games this year, Coach Forrest G. "Fod" Cotton announced today. Because most of the members of the basketball squad are on the football team, Cotton decided to book no games until the early part of January.

Last season, Cotton had a team of football "cripples" on his hands and the Cardinals didn't round into shape until late in the season. This year, with more time to recover, C. U. expects to improve its record of four victories in 18 games.

One of C. U.'s brightest cage stars, Wayne Ambrose, will be sorely missed this year. For three years, two of which he was top scorer in the District, Ambrose led his teammates in tallying points. Another absentee will be Johnny Matukaitis, who left school last spring.

Michigan State Wins Harrier Title

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 27.—Michigan State pushed enough runners across the finish line today to win national and central collegiate cross-country team championships, but Walter Mehl, of Wisconsin, broke the tape first.

Michigan State won with score of 54 points, beating Wisconsin by 3 points. Indiana, defending champion, was third with 84. Other scores were Drake, 104; Oklahoma A. M., 114; Michigan Normal, 129; Alfred, 220, and Ohio State, 230.

Members of the Purchasing pin team led the way to a season's record and two high scores for the night in the Southern Railway Clerks League at Arcadia. C. Harp rolled a 141 game, C. Colklesser a 364 set, and the team posted a record game of 631. B. of R. C. set a season's set record of 1,639.

Ken Douse accounted for the top game of the night in the Navy Department League, with a 153 count for the Marines, while Mike Vitale had a 387 set for Ordinance. Operations and Ordinance divided the team honors with respective game and set totals of 617 and 1,785.

Frank Xanten's powerful 417 set was the highlight of the Federal League pin-spilling at Arcadia, while Taylor had top game of 151. Department of Justice had the top game of 151 and G. P. O. the best set, 1,795.

BROOKLAND

Perce Elliett, District bowling executive, was in the spotlight in the Odd Fellows League at Brookland with a 404 set, while Jack Hodges had 160-367, and Frank Donaldson 360. Amity No. 1 went into first place by a game-and-a-half margin with a shutout victory.

LUCKY STRIKE

The Inter-departmental Mixed League opened at Lucky Strike with 24 teams in Section A in action. Twenty more will roll tomorrow at 5:15 in Section B. Joe Campbell, of Civil Service Tigers, was high with 155 and 384 while Peggy McCarty was high among the ladies with 145-368.

George Keyser's 160 game and a potent 407 set by Ike Goad were tops in the Kilowat League at Lucky Strike, while the teams were led by Transit's 608 game and 1,781 set.

Cameo Electric's quintet walked off with the Electrical League honors at Lucky Strike, with game and set of 605 and 1,671. H. Herbert, of Atlantic Electric and Jim Holland, who rolls for the Redman and Brown team, had respective high game and set of 14 and 375.

Earl McPhilomy was again high man in the Graphic Arts League with a 160 game, while Frank Mischou appeared in the 400 set circle once more with a 401 count. Team tops went to Judd and Detweiler with a 632 game and 1,857 set.

ICE PALACE

Insurance League leaders were Doran, of Hartford, with a 358 set and Johnson's 156 game.

CONVENTION HALL

Bakery won three from Office and went into a first place tie in the Sanico League at Convention Hall. Bakery topped the high team totals with a 595 game and 1,702 set, while Earle Harris rolled a 156 game and Eddie Hutchinson a 390 set for the individual leaders.

Missouri Players 'Are Receptive' To Any Bowl Bid

Columbia, Mo., Nov. 27 (AP).—Coach Don Faurot said the Missouri football team is "receptive" to a bowl offer.

The team met today and voted by secret ballot as to whether it wanted to play a post-season game. After the meeting, Faurot issued this statement:

"The Missouri University football team is receptive and would consider a bowl bid, providing the athletic committee of the university feels it wise to accept one and the Big Six Conference gives permission. The players would be willing to continue practice if a bid is forthcoming, but we will suspend practice until more definite word is heard."

Kinnick Named 'Outstanding'

the other two all-stars of 1938, were given honorable mention.

In the backfield with Kinnick and Harmon the coaches placed Don Scott, Ohio State's big quarterback, and George Paskvan, Wisconsin's pile-driving fullback.

Esco Sarkkinen, versatile Ohio State end, won the other flank post. The tackle spots went to Win Pedersen, Minnesota stalwart, and Jim Reeder, of Illinois. The coaches named Hal Method, of Northwestern, and Vic Marino, of Ohio State, at guards.

John Haman, of Northwestern, second team center a year ago, was promoted to the first team for his consistently brilliant work.

The second team is composed of Dave Rankin, Purdue, and John Mariucci, Minnesota, ends; Mike Enich, Iowa, and Nick Cutlich, Northwestern, tackles; Mel Brewer, Illinois, and James Logan, Indiana, guards; Steve Andrako, Ohio State, center; Evashevski, quarterback; Jim Langhurst, Ohio State, fullback, and Harold Van Every, Minnesota, Jim Strusbaugh, Ohio State, and George Franck, Minnesota, halfbacks. This trio tied for the two second team halfback spots.

On Fishing

ACKERMAN

On both the Chesapeake and the Potomac there is a wide variance in the bags of wildfowlers. We have had reports from some sections of going so good it was possible to have a limit of ducks safely hanging and out for upland shooting before noon.

Yet in other sections hunters are lamenting the poor shooting. Full days in the blinds producing hardly half the number of birds the law allows.

That goes for the great Sound country of North Carolina as well. We know of hunters in the area around Hatteras who wouldn't go out to their blinds opening day because the summer-like weather was keeping the birds rafted up far offshore.

Still, just north a hundred miles, George Sutton and Bob Eaves found shooting that left nothing to be desired. A card from Coinjock where George's cruiser Happy Days is berthed, says the going is every bit as good as was the marlin fishing this summer, which if you remember was just about the best ever.

Excellent Upland Shooting

However, in spite of raw overcast days of the past week, we haven't had any real wildfowl weather since the season opened. Until we do, the going will continue spotty. It will take a real norther and considerable drop in the temperature before the preseason promises of the best shooting in years can be fulfilled.

Upland shooting in Maryland has been excellent, even though the exceptionally dry fields made hard work for the dogs. During the past week the light rains partially corrected this condition.

Good grouse shooting in many nearby States brings before other State game commissions the demand that during the past several years has confronted the West Virginia Commission.

Many West Virginia sportsmen, recognizing the grouse as the king of American game birds, and in spite of the fact that natural propagation in the wild state seems to be meeting the hunting demand, have wondered whether or not artificial propagation could be used to guarantee a constant supply. Some even go so far as to demand that such propagation be immediately undertaken.

So far the West Virginia commission has not done so, and it is very unlikely any other State commission under present conditions will be in a position to do so either.

Why?—The enthusiast demands—and points to the success breeders have had with bobwhite quail during the past several years.

Technicians who have been studying the problem, say, in the first place, artificial propagation of grouse is one of the most difficult they have ever encountered. It is not solved even now, after years of effort. It is still in the experimental stage. Methods, exceedingly costly and requiring special facilities, are not yet perfected. There is no guarantee that grouse can be raised artificially, for in every experiment few birds have reached maturity, and most of these died soon after reaching full growth.

Short Mating Season

In the New York Game Commission-Cornell undertaking, which solved many food problems, the importance of fly larvae in the diet was ascertained. Without it they failed to thrive.

With the diet worked out, there is disease to combat. Not one, but many. Then there is the small matter of securing eggs. In the wild the grouse lays an average of 11 eggs. On wire the average is 7, and the fertility is not so high as that of wild eggs.

Then there is the difficulty of the definate and short mating season. How to obtain complete synchronization of the mating cycles of both sexes of penned birds has as yet not been fully solved. Without it, fertility is very low. It has been obtained in some experiments, with much hard work and study, but raising the cost of production tremendously.

And cost of production is a really important factor in producing grouse on a large scale. Raised at the cost of a $100 per bird it would provide hunting, but scarcely within the reach of hunters paying from $2 to $5 a year for a license.

So, until the science of raising ruffed grouse is perfected sufficiently so that a large number of strong, healthy birds which can survive when released, can be raised at a reasonable cost, efforts to embark upon a grouse-raising program would be unwise, and beyond reach of any Conservation Commission's present technical and financial resources.

New Deal Ideas Halt Real Rise, Steelman Says

Heavy Taxes, Federal Controls Kill Propts, Declares E. T. Weir

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Nov. 27.—E. T. Weir, steel producer, today described the current business upturn as unsound and declared that permanent recovery was prevented by Government spending and the effect of New Deal "theories" on business.

The present high level of business activity, the chairman of the National Steel Corporation said in an address to the Economic Club of Detroit, has resulted largely from anticipation of war buying from Europe.

Permanent recovery, he said, depends upon sustained high volume of private investment in productive enterprise, and low profits in recent years have cut off this investment. He asserted heavy taxation and the disruption of business by new regulation and controls of Government were responsible for low profits and business losses.

He declared the "New Deal master minds are concentrating on ways and means to increase the national income" in an effort to avoid increasing taxes in an election year and to avoid curtailing expenditures.

"Mysterious Submarines"

For that reason, he said, "experiments are being soft-pedaled; mysterious submarines have taken the place of economic royalists as threats to the national welfare, and according to Washington observers, plans are being made to give business "a shot in the arm" if there is any sign of contraction in the rate of business activity."

He termed the Wagner labor law and its administration by the National Labor Relations Board "major factors" in "producing the greatest period of labor disturbance in the history of the country," and added:

"No natural disaster can equal the destructive effort of continuing labor dissension. Prudent men will no more build enterprises in communities that become notorious for labor strife than they will build on a possible battleground of warring armies."

Foe of New Deal

Stars and Stripes Now Safest Flag On the High Seas

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—American shipping insurance underwriters, according to their new war risk rates today, consider vessels flying the United States flag the safest on the high seas. The underwriters announced a new schedule of premiums covering the risks of "war, strike, riots and civil commotions." The schedule excludes any shipments to or from any German or Russian ports.

The highest regular rate charged is 7½ per cent the value of the cargo on any belligerent nation's ship trading south of Bergen in the Scandinavian countries and, consequently, in the area of Germany's most intensive submarine campaign. The rate for neutral flag vessels in the same area runs from 5 to 7 per cent, according to points of call and destination.

The preference for United States flag vessels is demonstrated in the schedule for imports into Norway by the northern route. In that case, the rate for United States ships is 2½ per cent; for other neutral flag ships, 3 per cent, and for belligerent flag ships, 4 per cent.

Wheat, Except December, Ends Hiher for Day

Chicago, Nov. 27 (AP).—Prices of wheat contracts specifying delivery of grain in May or July next year advanced fractionally today in response to continuation of the Southwestern drought and unfavorable crop reports from the southern hemisphere.

December contracts, on which delivery can be made beginning Friday and which have been selling 2½ to 5 cents over deferred deliveries, declined. Weakness of nearby delivery wheat was attributed to selling by interests not wishing to obtain the actual grain, in view of the cheapness of 1940 contracts which normally would be quoted at a slight premium equivalent to carrying charges. Switching of speculative positions into the cheaper contracts also was reported. December could be sold at near the best prices of the season.

May and July wheat closed ¼-⅝ higher than Saturday at 86-86⅛ and 83⅞-84, while December was ¼-⅜ lower at 88-87⅞. Corn was unchanged to ¼ higher; December, 50½; May, 52½-⅝; oats, ⅛-¾ up; rye, ⅝-¾ up and lard 2-10 lower.

Export Margin Is the Largest In Two Years

Cotton, Fruit, Auto and Corn Shipments gain; Tobacco Declines

By the Associated Press

Exports of American merchandise exceeded imports in October by the largest margin in nearly two years, the Commerce Department reported today.

Exports totalled $332,079,000 and imports $215,281,000. The $116,798,000 difference was said by the department to be the widest spread for any month since January, 1938.

Although the report showed a slight increase for the month in exports to Latin America, which has been largely cut off from some of its European sources of supply, experts said the full effect of the war on American trade was not shown.

In October last year, exports totaled $277,668,000 and imports $178,024,000, an export excess of $99,644,000. The excess of exports in October enabled totals for 1939 to creep up on last year, and the $2,516,978,000 export total for the first 10 months of the year was $681,192,000 ahead of imports. In the same period last year, exports totaled $2,573,115,000 and were $970,220,000 ahead of imports.

Effects of War

A few war effects were shown by the October figures, especially in the failure of tobacco shipments to make the usual seasonal gain. Tobacco shipments totaled $6,190,000 compared with $29,489,000 in October a year ago. England is one country which has been cutting down tobacco purchases.

Cotton exports which had lagged in a serious manner, increased, however, to $47,254,000 in October, which was more than double the figure for the same month last year. Other export increases included fruit, automobiles and corn.

Imports, as well as exports, were larger than in October last year, due largely to increased American purchases of foreign rubber, coffee, cocoa, woodpulp, newsprint and silk.

U. S. Industry Awaits Allied Buying Program

Cleveland, Nov. 27.—Just how much buying will be done by the British and French commissions now settled in New York offices is yet to be determined, according to Steel magazine. However, is is known that credits ranging up to $7,000,000,000 are available if necessary.

There is no indication that large purchases of basic materials will be made immediately. From the outset, the war has been regarded as an economic struggle and both commissions are expected to be extremely judicious in their purchasing. It is no secret that the British, especially, will depend upon the empire for supplies to the full extent of its resources.

As an example, France placed a huge tonnage of copper, largely with American-owned companies, while Britain bought from her empire. One of the first acts of the British commission in the United States was to place a $24,000,000 order for airplanes a few days ago with an American plane builder. More than anything else, France orobably requires coke, and large tonnages have been bought here. Lik th billigrnt trading of World War days, Franc ad2naon of World Wr days, Frac and Germany are reported exchanging ore and coke via Belgium.

Both England and France have purchased a large amount of equipment here. In fact, these purchases have eclipsed well publicized Russian orders for many months.

Price Changes Fractional, Trading Dull Major News of the Day, Maintenance Of Steel Prices, Comes After Close

New York, Nov. 27.—Trading in the stock market held near the lows of recent inactivity today and fluctuations again were largely fractional. The composite average showed a meaningless loss of 0.02 point. Aviations were about even on the day and the only group to make a show of consistent strength was the metals. Issues which got as much as a point away from their closings of last week were the exception. Harvester lost a point. Hollander got down to its previous low of the year but rallied to close up a small fraction. Pressure on this issue has been because of the SEC's action which contemplates possible delisting of the capital stock. Inactive Hercules Powder preferred jumped 3 points and a number of other preferred reflected some special buying. The market as a whole, however, was not changed from the recent previous sessions.

Major financial news of the day came after the close when the largest subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation reaffirmed most of its steel prices for the first quarter. In spite of rising costs and many uncertainties the corporation will make no horizontal increase. In announcing its decision the corporation specified that it did so with the aim of "preventing inflationary tendencies" in this country.

The action was in line with expectations but a final and official announcement was welcomed by the trade. A factor in the situation is the investigation now being carried on by the temporary National Economic Committee.

Steel Trade Opinion

Some of the so-called independent producers would have preferred a price increase at this time because of the rising costs of operation and it may be that some of them will be pinched if they follow the lead of the steel corporation, as they doubtless will have to do. On the other hand, the good flow of domestic orders, coupled with the same prices which exist in this quarter, should help to keep the rate of operations of the industry at a high level.

The rate of operations advanced to another new high for the last few years today and currently more steel is being turned out of American mills than ever before in history. The rate of advance has been slowed down, as would be expected. The current operations are at 94.4 per cent of capacity, a gain of a half-point over the previous week, indicating that the Thanksgiving Day holiday, for half of the country, had little or no effect.

Weirs Statement

There is a difference of opinion among steel men, and all businessmen, as to the soundness of the present improvement in business. E. T. Deir, outspoken opponent of the present Administration, regards the improvement as unsound, and sees a lasting recovery impeded by Government spending and the effect of New Deal theories on business.

The breakdown of these theories is daily becoming more apparent, but not all business leaders will agree with the head of National Steel that the present recovery is unsound. As far as recovery is based on war it is unsound, for a lasting peace is the only sound basis for a lasting prosperity. But while the war touched off the present boom in steel and other lines, it did no more than start the buying wave. It has been domestic orders that have kept the mills running, and evidnece accumulates that we can expect little in orders from the belligerents.

Interfering with the length of life of the present high rate of business activity, as Mr. Weir intimates, is the political outlook, bringing with it possible increased taxes, a certainty of an unbalanced budget, antagonism toward business in high places and a political campaign next year that is certain to be bitter.

Curtiss-Wright again led the market in activity today, advansing a small fraction. North American Aviation also was active and higher. International Nickel was under pressure. Steel and Bethlehem held around their former levels, as did Chrysler, while motors added a half point.

Treasury Bonds Advance

Notable improvement in prices for Terasury bonds was recorded in the late over-counter dealings following announcement of terms for the new Government financing today. Final prices showed gains ranging up to 11-32 point, with only the 2s of 1947 showing a decline. Stock exchange prices for Terasurys had reflected moderate firmness but later dealings enlarged the gains.

With volume of dealings continuing small, the remainder of the market had few features. The average of 30 bonds was off 0.04 point on the day. Declines of 0.09 point were shown by the rails, while the more speculative rails sold off 0.12 point. Industrials were down 0.03 point and utilities were up 0.12 point in the averages.

In the foreign list British Empire issues such as Canadians and Australians were easier and Scandinavian loans were under some pressure.

Cotton Futures Move Upward 10 to 40c a Bale

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—Despite considerable outright liquidation in December, plus transfer from that month forward, cotton futures kept their balance today. Covering operations gave the market its main prop and final prices for old type contracts were up 2 to 8 points. Distant new October lost 4.

First notice day for December contracts on Tuesday kept operators busy evening up accounts. Highlight of dealings was sale of 20,000 bales of December by a leading spot interest. The deal was believed to be against a reverse transaction at New Orleans at about 8 points difference.

C. & P. Tel. Co. To Spend $76,000 More on Plant

Directors of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. have authorized expenditures of about $76,000 for additional telephone equipment and facilities in the District, according to a statement yesterday by C. A. Robinson, general manager.

About $20,000 will be spent for the purchase, rearrangement and additions to telephone cable facilities that have been made necessary by increased telephone service in the vicinity of Fort Totten Park and Rock Creek Cemetery.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Puzzling to new bridge players is F. K. Perkins' statement that "an ace is more than a trick."

"It represents control of a suit," he explains, "and for that reason it controls the timing of that suit. The holder of an ace can elect his own time for winning his trick, within certain limits; so every ace means control of a 'time unit' as well as an intrinsic trick value."

Today's hand, taken from the Boston expert's notebook, illustrates his point. East, defending against four spades, discovered that his ace of trumps was worth much more than a trick provided he played it properly; in fact, it determined the outcome of the contract. In East's case it resulted in allowing declarer to make his bid with two overtricks; further consideration, aided by correct play, would have ended in declarer's defeat.

West selected a fine opening lead, but East failed to make the most of the play. He saw dummy's singleton club and, fearing ruffs by declarer, won his ace immediately and led another trump.

He succeeded in clearing trumps from the board, but overlooked the serious menace in the heart suit. Declarer simply extracted the last trump, took the heart finesse and ran hearts and spades and the ace of diamonds for 11 tricks. He conceded a club at the end.

East should have realized the threat of the heart suit and that, regardless of whether South or West held the king, the suit could not be blocked. He should have refused to give up trump control immediately and held off with the spade ace. It would have been impossible then for South to make game.

MR. TARZAN, I PRESUME . . . That muscular gentleman who swings through the air with the greatest of ease and who introduced the two syllable word to thousands and thousands of youthful Americans, will be exposed this evening by his creator. He is Tarzan, his creator is Edgar Rice Burroughs and, believe it or not, Tarzan has made $100,000,000. (Leave all those ciphers on, Mr. Printer) for all and sundry. All and sundry includes Mr. Burroughs, Mr. John Weissmuller, cartoonists, toy manufacturers, publishers and all others who have dipped their fingers into the Tarzan gold factory.

Burroughs will be on "We, the People" tonight at nine on WJSV So will Charles Harrison, a high school football coach at Kanakee, Ill. Harrison's claim to fame is his 1985 football team which included a pair of youngsters named Harry Stella and Allen Bergner. Stella is now captain of the grid team at West Point and Bergner is the leader at Annapolis. There is another possibility for "We, the People" tonight that will be of great interest to Washingtonians if it pans out. Right now it's a secret.

GENTLE HINT . . . Engineers, announcers and other WJSV personnel bric-a-brac have been visiting Community Chest supported orphanages and old folks' homes these days for broadcasts. So impressed were they by what they saw that they have been persuaded to tell all in a broadcast. And if you ever tried to get an engineer to talk into a microphone you'll know just how impressed WJSV's knob-twirlers were.

NUTS AND JOLTS

Seasoned Timber

By Dorothy Canfield

Chapter 68

"YES, YOU'RE right, Mr. Peck," said Timothy. "Eli certainly has an unusual amount of practical ability."

"Not just practical ability—I got plenty of practical ability. Business sense, that's what he's got! More'n his little finger than you and me in our hull bodies. I'm a good mechanic. And you're a good teacher. But we can't hold a candle to Eli when it comes to makin' money."

Making money. Making money. Business ability and making money. Timothy walked on, thinking of those words, not noticing where he was going. When he stopped and looked around him the sun had long since dropped back of Hemlock Mountain. The air here in the valley was full of duskiness, but along the showy ridge of The Wall there stretched for miles the rose-mauve glow of the last moments before the fall of night. As long as it lasted he stood looking at the darkened valley with this heavenly radiance hanging close above it.

He could not have told what was in his mind as he gazed. It seemed to be mere blank, passive contemplation. Certainly it was nothing like the restless play of reasoning, logic and deduction to which his mind was used. But after that, when Eli dropped in for a talk he found himself waiting for an opening in the door of fact. And once in a while when it opened he spoke through it to the Eli who lived within, the young Eli, unformed, unhardened, taking shape.

ONE EVENING when they had wandered into reminiscences of the campaign—by far the most exciting event in Eli's life so far—the boy asked, "Say, what kind of a man was that Mr. Wheaton, anyhow?" Timothy told the story of Wheaton's early life—not unlike Eli's, he thought, and drew a portrait of Mr. Wheaton's character, ending: "A Stone Age man living in the twentieth century, you see the never talked down to Eli), as much so as a prize-fighter. But lots more dangerous to all of us in the twentieth century than a prize-fighter. Yet through no fault of his. Nobody'd dream, just because a prize-fighter has got extra strong muscles and good timing, of letting him decide when to operate on a person with appendicitis. But just because Mr. Wheaton was extra clever at making money, people kept putting him in positions where his say-so helped decide what pictures should hang in museums, and what subjects should be taught in schools. It's very bad for a person's character to be constantly passing judgment on what he doesn't understand. That great fortune of Mr. Wheaton's, all it did for him was to shove him into one false position after another where the kind of brains he had were as out of place as mine would be if I tried to run a department store. I wonder why—" Timothy went on musingly—"I really do wonder why business is so different from everything else modern men do? Do you suppose it really has to be? You have a good head for business. What do you think"

Eli did not know what he meant. So he told him: the scientists who would never dream of using, only to make more money for themselves, the discoveries made by their brain—insulin, the test for butter-fat, the Curie's free gift of radium to the world. "All they get for themselves, all they want is a living. And after all what more can anybody use? What more did Mr. Wheaton have? Why should the man with a gift for business be the only human who expects to get paid for the use of his brains just all he can extract from the people who can't get along without it?"

"But, Mr. Hulme, he can't get more than just so much—competition keeps that down."

So there was talk, very simple talk in short words, about competition compared to cooperation. Then Timothy went on, "But it's not only scientists—take the professions. Look at all the unpaid work that doctors do. Medical men give away the use of their brains half the time. Yes, I know they ask big fees from rich people. But the greatest doctor in the world would never dream of trying to get in his whole lifetime of skilled work any such huge fortune as lucky speculators in real estate have grabbed from the rise in the price of land in our big cities. And not one of them would patent a life-saving invention of his to make money out of a monopoly of it."

ELI WENT to bed on that. But the next morning at breakfast he said, "Now see here, Mr. Hulme, I been thinking about that, and it looks to me . . ."

It was a running debate they carried on irregularly all through the winter, sometimes with periods when it was not mentioned, but often enough so that Aunt Lavinia soon cried out that she was sick of their rehashing those trite old economic pros and cons in this ridiculously over-simplified way, and as for cooperatives she would get up from the table if they were mentioned again. This put them companionably together in the ranks of the scolded, and gave a pleasant furtive quality to the evening talks. Timothy had noticed long ago about Eli that there was no throwing him off a scent he had once caught. He hung to the idea that seemed so new and provocative to him, reading

COMING!

A Serial by Mary Roberts Rinehart

"The Doctor"

You'll want to read every chapter of this new serial story in The Post. Out of her own personal experiences as a nurse and a doctor's wife, Mary Roberts Rinehart has written a novel of the odds facing a young doctor as he struggles from internship to final recognition as a great surgeon.

Starts Next Sunday.

slowly the occasional books Timothy loaned him, wrestling clumsily with them and with Timothy in a long serially conducted argument of which he did not weary. They restated their positions over and over with the iteration so tiresome to listeners to a discussion, so necessary to those taking part in it. Timothy's position was simple. As had been said a thousand times last summer in the campaign, it was axiomatic that it wasn't a help to a group of human beings but a loss if anybody in it was at a serious disadvantage. And one person's having an enormous deal of money put other people at a disadvantage. It was better for everybody to have it spread around more evenly. Money was like manure—splendid fertilizer when spread out thin—but it killed out everything when it was piled up in heaps.

"My goodness maybe so, Mr. Hulme. But how's anybody going to prevent it?"

"Well, that's just what I don't know, Eli. I'm no businessman. I'm only a teacher. And I'm getting old. It's up to you young folks to find out if anything can be done—beyond just trying to even things up by taking the money away from folks that get hold of a pile of it, the way modern taxes try to do. Maybe nothing can be done. But now consider this notion of cooperative buying and selling and running things, that people nowadays keep coming back to, that my aunt is so sick of hearing us talk about. Evidently the idea won't work unless people like you with a head for business take hold of and make it fit whatever the situation is—like a well-trained engineer making a bridge to fit the particular stream that's to be crossed. Well, why shouldn't a businessman do that, and enjoy doing it, just as a laboratory man does medical research—for a living and for the satisfaction of using his brains in work they do well? Do you see—I'd really like to know how it does look to you—why that's such a flighty schoolteacherish idea?"

THAT WOULD be all for a week or so—while Timothy taught English and held faculty meetings and addressed the P.-T. A. and lost his temper with a mother and apologized, and helped with rehearsals of the senior play, and struggled with his ski-turns, and sickened over an imagined light step on the stairs and went to bed hoping very much that he could go to sleep quickly; while Eli drove his bus and kept his narrow jaws and strong teeth chewing and swallowing the new ideas and "chewed" up his cud and chewed it again, and burst out some evening, "But now listen, Mr. Hulme, just listen. That last book you gave me to read says . . ."

Timothy always laid aside his work to listen. After Eli had spread out on the table the thought-stuff he had been ruminating on, he always took time to make a comment on it. "Well, yes, we have got so far as to think that most of a rich man's extra money ought to be given away. Even Mr. Wheaton felt that. But 'doing good' that way is rather like sticking back in the ground a lot of branches you've cut off a tree. Most of them don't take root. Can't. But if they'd been left on the tree they would have still been alive and growing."

"Well, but, Mr. Hulme——"

"I'm awfully sorry, Eli. I've got about a million English themes to correct. We'll have to let it go at that for tonight."

In February, after what Clifford people called a master great windblow, someone told Aunt Lavinia that a window of the stone house on the Crandall Pitch Road had been blown in, and she harried Timothy to repair it. So the next Saturday after it happened he drove to the foot of the steep hill-road, left his car there, and trudged up through the deep snow to the house. Pain walked close beside him. But he did not step less firmly for it.

It was a cloudy dark day, a few flakes of snow falling from a gray sky, a whining wind knocking the bare maple boughs about. He let himself stoically into the house, went through to the woodshed, got out the necessary boards and with loud blows of his hammer, nailed them over the broken window. Behind him the old mirror gleamed dully in the darkened room. He dusted off his hands, stood for a moment to look around him at the cold hearth and inanimate chairs and tables, took a few deep breaths, let himself out and locked the door behind him.

STANDING UNDER the frozen maples to pull his woolen gloves on—he had his gloves with him—he turned his worn eagle-face up towards the abandoned road to the Crandall Pitch, down which the old man trying to be young had driven himself to his death—and with him so many lads and lassies golden with youth. But he did not shake his fist at the skies. He took off his glasses, held them for a moment, put them on again and trudged back down the hill, sadness walking close beside him.

This was not—not yet—the emotional stagnation for which he longed, to which he hoped he was winning; but he could live with this. Since he must.

He trudged on. It was nearly two miles to the highway. Before he reached his Ford, waiting there, he was shaking his head and wincing over a recent failure of his, in the talk last Sunday evening, at the house. A chance mention of the latest Nazi success had taken the group into exactly the spontaneous objective discussion of Fascism he had been waiting for. The students had put just the questions to him he had hoped some time to have them put. They had given him his opportunity. And he had lost it. He had felt so intensely the need to say the right thing that he had tried to say too much, had said nothing, and said it badly, cloudily, overwhelmed like an untried boy by his failure to find words for a great meaning. The only intelligent thing he had done was to quote Mr. Dewey's axiom that nothing ever just happened, hence that Fascism could not have just happened. The only phrase he had used that penetrated at all below the surface was that we would all better beware of the holier-than-thou attitude towards Fascism. And his young listeners had been bewildered by that.

The chance—the combination of the hour, the place, the mood—would probably never come again. Lost chances seldom did. If only he had been ready for this one. He fell to thinking deeply about how to use the next one better, if it ever came. When he reached his car, he stood beside it, one hand on the door, his eyes turned inward, straining for a clearer sight of the conception that was too big for words.

IT WAS QUIET on the edge of the snowy road. Asking himself with passion, with distress over his failure, what he had wanted to say to those children of the future in that one rare instant when they might have listened, he felt his painful discomfiture begin to dissolve as in a lovely treacherous southern breeze; his floundering, halting, qualifying aptitude melted away in the exquisite illusion of triumphant mastery which comes when a man is talking to himself. In the fool's paradise of the inner colloquy, with a docile and admiring interlocutor who is eagerly receptive, who requires no firesome proof of what you say, who never doubts, never misunderstands, for whom your confusion is crystal clear, who is never mocking, always sympathetic—what masterstrokes can be dealt, what glorious victories won! Timothy expanded guilelessly in the certainty that inspiration had at last come to him, that now he knew perfectly how to say what he wanted, and strode off from cloud to cloud, hurling thunderbolts: he had wanted to tell his young listeners that they must go on from where Mr. Dewey left off, that freedom is not worth fighting for if it means no more than license for everyone to get as much as he can for himself. And freedom is worth fighting for. Because it does mean more than unrestricted grabbing.

He was no longer alone, standing by a snowy deserted road, he was in his living-room again, those young faces once more looking up at him attentively, receptively, he was having his lost chance over again, and this time his eloquence was carrying all before him. "Laugh in the faces of the Fascist priests who chant the new Black Mass when they tell you boys and girls that democratic government means nothing but license for the money-getters. The impudence of them to use that line of attack, with their marching and countermarching pauper-slaves, no better off economically than economic serfs have always been. When, at the crack of the whip, their yellow-squads bawl that economic slavery must always follow political freedom, just ask them what their proof is. They have no proof! The enormous idiocy of too-great wealth and too-great poverty, doesn't it come because a primitive way of handling one side of life has hung on into our emerging civilization, where it's no longer useful—the vermiform appendix of modern society? It's being undermined, it's being attacked from all sides—the old Bastille of economic injustice! Its gates shake. Its forlorn old garrison with their white waistcoats and their florid, angry, frightened faces look out in dismay over its crumbling walls. Man the battering-ram of co-operative action—and I don't mean just Swedish co-operative stores. I mean co-operative living. Buying and selling, aren't they the only things left—except war—frankly and unashamedly in the Stone Age? Why should they be left there?

Auto Seized, Owner Sues For $100,000

Printing Executive Says Tire Company Illegally Altered Mortgage

Phillip R. Belt, 38, 208 Ascot place northeast, sued General Tire Co., 1602 Fourteenth street northwest, in the District Court yesterday for $100,000 damages for seizing his automobile when he owed a $13.90 bill.

Belt asked $50,000 because his automobile was taken from a parking place in front of his home and $50,000 besides because the tire company invoked a chattel mortgage which Belt claims was unlawfully altered.

Belt, manager of the Ace Printing Co., and a former District commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, was represented by Attorney Franklyn Yasmer.

Official Named

Besides the tire company, the complaint named as a defendant Henry B. Murphee, who was described as manager and assistant to the president of the company.

Belt's complaint said that on September 28, 1938, he bought two tires on installments, for $15.90, and signed the blank form of a chattel mortgage on his automobile to secure the bill. These tires were paid for, the complaint said, when Belt bought two more tires on January 13, 1939.

Charges Extra Costs

Belt said there was $13.90 due on the second pair of tires when he was late with a payment in March of this year. He charged the tire company with filling out the mortgage to make it cover the second purchase. Then, the complaint said, Murphee took the automobile from in front of the Belt home about 7 p. m. on March 3.

To regain the car the complaint said, Belt "was unlawfully and against his will, forced to pay . . . the sum of $10 as a repossession or 'snatching charge' and $1 storage charge and also the sum of 13.90 due on the charge account."

He asked the damages for the indignity and embarrassment he suffered and for the injury to his credit and reputation.

Pittman Predicts Idle U. S. Ships Will Find Business

By the Associated Press

Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, predicted yesterday that an increase in American shipping to Pacific and South American ports soon would recall to service most of the Merchant Marine vessels made idle by restrictions in the neutrality act.

Pittman, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he believed that sinking of belligerent and neutral vessels by loose mines in the European war area would be reflected quickly in withdrawals of other ships on those nations from Pacific and South American service.

"If this war lasts another year," he told reporters, "I don't think we will have any of our ships idle. I think they will all be in trade, replacing the ships of other nations which have transferred to European waters."

Pittman, declaring that most American shipping companies are glad that their ships are not going into combat areas, urged that Congress consider reimbursing ship owners for loss of revenue suffered because of the restrictions.

Ry. Express Expects Big Holiday Traffic

"We are expecting the biggest holiday express traffic in years, and for good reason," C. W. Turner, superintendent of the Railway Express Agency here, said yesterday. "The Christmas gift habit is increasing and never before have so many beautiful and practical things been available for the purpose. You can depend upon it that the people, who are now on the pay roll, are going to make up for the time when they had economy enforced upon them."

Mr. Turner stated that he expected there would be increased use of express service for sending holiday packages, because of rate reductions recently put into effect, on shipments of 21 pounds or under, for all distances, and on those of 50 pounds and under for shorter distances.

Judge Assails Police Invasion of Civil Rights

Invasion of the liberties of the citizens by police officers was excoriated from the Municipal Court bench by Judge Nathan Cayton yesterday.

"Officers have no more right than other persons to violate the law," said Judge Cayton in upholding the District statute providing that the police forfeit $500 to any person held without charge for more than six hours. The law says a prisoner must be shown a warrant or released when the six hours expire.

The ruling meant that Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, Inspector Bernard Thompson, chief of detectives, and other officers must defend themselves in December against the $500 suit of James F. (Buzz) Donovan.

Donovan was held "for investigation" August 12 in connection with a $227 holdup. Attorney James J. Laughlin demanded that the police show a warrant for Donovan. When none was shown after six hours, Laughlin demanded his client's release, warning that otherwise he would file the $500 suit.

Donovan was not released until he had been held 45 hours, after Laughlin had sued in the District Court for a habeas corpus.

Chester Gray, assistant corporation counsel, told Judge Cayton yesterday that the law did not require the officers to produce a warrant if none existed.

Without hearing Laughlin's argument, Judge Cayton ruled in his favor.

Meanwhile, Laughlin has filed a $50,000 suit against the police in the District Court for false arrest.
